PUBLISHERS FOREWORD

It was in the late spring of 1914, just twenty-four years ago, that we began this work to make private schools better known to their patrons and to each other. It was another year before the first edition of the Handbook appeared. One edition was lost during the War.

In this quarter century we have produced 22 editions of the Handbook of Private Schools, 12 editions of the Handbook of Summer Camps, 13 volumes of Private School News, 6 editions of the Brief School and Summer Camp Guides, and 9 editions of the School and Camp Buyers Guides. About a score of magazine articles on educational subjects have also been printed, a total of some 40,000 pages, — perhaps 20,000,000 words printed on private schools.

ANNUAL EDITIONS NECESSARY

Constant change, new schools established, spurts of growth in others, necessitate thousands of changes each year in this Handbook. The new born and the dying demand attention. So not only are annual editions necessary, but complete resetting and remaking of each section of the book.

In this 22nd edition, some forty-five schools, discontinued, have been omitted, and thirty-five of decreased importance removed from the critical text to the supplementary list. Some sixty new schools have been noted and introduced, twenty in the critical text and forty in the supplementary list, and twenty-five, increased in importance, have been moved to the critical text from the supplementary list.

Junior colleges have in the last decade come to play so important a part in the further education of our high school and private school graduates that more attention to these institutions has seemed necessary in this edition. About sixty junior colleges not heretofore included will be found in the critical text and in the supplementary lists. All this shows not merely change but healthy growth.

The vast amount of information accumulated annually has made this book not only a guide for parents, as originally planned, but an important reference book, an essential desk tool, for school and college executives and all who deal with our elementary and secondary schools.

In the colleges and universities these Handbooks are in general use by admissions committees, appointment bureaus, deans. In the great cities scores of each edition are in public and private libraries. Public school superintendents find use for the book.

Information bureaus generally keep it at hand. It is found in the reading rooms of many hotels, clubs and steamships. But the most important distribution is direct to the homes of families of wealth and intellect, patrons of the private schools, for whom this book is primarily made.

SOURCES OF INFORMATION

Information comes from every source, pupils, patrons, principals, trustees, teachers. Schools are given every opportunity to supply correct and up-to-date information and statistics. Some fail to report. In other cases, where figures seem to indicate over-optimism on the part of the school head as to the actual enrollment, they are omitted. We endeavor to print just the information that a parent wants and ought to know, which is frequently of a kind that the school head cannot convincingly impart and sometimes would not willingly do so. One cannot blame the schools for attempting to put their best foot forward. Many that have fallen behind, in an effort to put up a good front try to make it apparent that things are as they always were. Others angle skilfully with honeyed words for similar results.

The first intent is to give something of the history, traditions, and atmosphere of the school, and the personalities that have affected and control. Failing to understand this and wishing more recognition for himself, the head of one of the nation's great schools writes, "Only two sentences in the article have anything to do with what we have accomplished in the last twelve years." Another school head's question, "May I ask why your critical attitude toward our school?" brought the response "My attitude toward every school is necessarily 'critical'."

The brief geographical paragraphs are of interest to parents, showing as they do something of the atmosphere of the town and the environment in which the child will live. The usual real estate blurb is avoided, to which the Chambers of Commerce occasionally take exception.

In a quarter of a century one would expect a book like this to become static, impersonal, but this edition, as its predecessors, it is hoped, shows evidence of considerable vitality. To see the parents' problem, the needs of the boy or the girl and to write of the schools from this point of view has made the book increasingly influential and has brought parents, more than a thousand a year, to write and come from all over the country to this office for further and specific information in connection with a particular child.

THE PRIVATE SCHOOL AS IT IS TODAY

Private Schools in the United States and Canada include what in England are known both as public schools and private schools. The great 'public schools' of England like Eton and Harrow correspond to our privately endowed schools like Exeter and Andover.

In the United States "A Private School is one dependent on private initiative for its inception and maintenance, not wholly or in part dependent on public taxation." Scholastic and legal critics of this definition, given in the 1915 edition of this Handbook, have failed to frame a better one.

Private schools in America have been established by private initiative, individual or collective, for the benefit of certain groups of children. Usually the motive has been altruistic, the desire to serve youth or to demonstrate some new method of education or improvement or innovation in school procedure. As in all other fields of human endeavor, some abuses, competitive hostilities, self advertising sometimes cleverly concealed, have developed because of the profit motive.

Education at the tax payers' expense has been so long available that we Americans tend to forget that all the practices and methods of the public schools originated in schools under private initiative.

The new idea, the new method originates with some one man. Sometimes an association or charitable organization takes it up. Our secondary school curriculum was largely worked out in the private academies which multiplied in the first half of the nineteenth century. They created a demand for secondary education, so that in the nineties public high schools, maintained at the expense of the taxpayer, began to increase.

Today in the United States 90% of the total school enrollment, 33,000,000, is in public educational institutions, 10% in private. And 90% of this private school enrollment is in Catholic parochial schools, according to the report of the U. S. Office of Education.

PUBLIC VERSUS PRIVATE

The mass demand for education in our country has resulted in the almost complete socialization of our schools. Three billions of tax-raised money are annually spent to maintain our public schools, their million teachers, their tens of thousands of local school boards, many with their own system of graft or special privilege. The great majority of all our children of school age attend these public schools which are almost as completely socialized as our sewers. But one may still have a private school though one can't have a private sewer.

There are great stretches of our country, especially west of the Alleghenies, where it is considered undemocratic to send one's children to a school that is not tax supported. Great uniformity in the curriculum and outlook exists on the whole throughout the system. The great city schools and the small town schools differ in facilities and atmosphere, but the standards are much the same, though there are differences in the degree which they are lived up to. There are differences in the amount of chromium in the cafeterias, in the elaborateness of the equipment in the manual training and athletic departments.

Only occasionally is there a personality with whom the students come in contact whose individuality has not been wholly ironed out by the system of supervision and the tyranny of the school board. The public school system, however, isn't so much affected by the colleges as is the private preparatory school permeated by ancient traditions seeping down from above.

The most constant thing about the private schools is their variety. No two are identical. Each has its distinguishing characteristics, determined by the tradition, custom, locality, clientele, and attitude of the head master or mistress, and the attitude and quality of the student body. But still private schools in their methods, curriculum, and public pronouncements remain for the most part conservative and too well satisfied.

PRIVATE INITIATIVE IMPERATIVE

Never before was there so great an opportunity for initiative, straight thinking, bold action in educational leadership. Foresight and vision is needed to a greater degree in these days when there is everywhere confusion of thinking and action. The private school has before it a great opportunity, and fortunately, in places, this is being realized.

SELECTING A SCHOOL

The choice of a school is an important matter. Often it determines the success or failure of the boy or girl for years if not for life. Practically all American parents are ambitious to provide the best possible schooling for their children. Discriminating parents are yearly coming to appreciate the difficulties and the niceties of making a wise selection.

If during the past few generations parents had been able to provide just the right environment for their children, if the schools had achieved complete adjustment for all their pupils, everyone about us would be perfectly attuned, adequately informed, happy and content, and at a maximum of usefulness and productivity. All would have right attitudes, good habits. And what a different world it would be!

THE PROBLEM OF ADJUSTMENT

'Sending the child to school',—that was the whole duty of parents a generation or so ago. Now parents have begun to realize that there's something more to it. The young have problems of their own. All we can do is help them, and some times we hinder more than we help. It is their world but they have to adjust themselves to it. Sometimes it is a difficult and serious problem for them.

Adjustment is the problem of every living individual, plant or animal. Those that do not adjust themselves are not a success, do not continue to live usefully. A school is supposed to help a child to adjust himself to the life and world in which he is to live.

The intentions of our parents were good. They were earnest, conscientious, ambitious for their children. They took, so far as their vision permitted, the best of what was afforded, but the results are not such that we can commend them highly. Few parents today can conscientiously and sincerely speak as did Marcus Aurelius, "I thank the gods that I had abundance of good masters for my children." Most parents' good intentions merely paved the road to the present hell in which we live, and we owe them little gratitude. In "This Is My Story" Mrs. Roosevelt, born and bred an aristocrat, tells us she derived little benefit from her formal education except for her two years in English schools. Logan Pearsall Smith, writing of his boyhood and youth, declares, "I got almost nothing of intellectual value from Harvard University." Yet he had as fellow students Santayana and Berenson, and sat under Royce, James and Palmer.

FITTING THE SCHOOL TO THE CHILD

A shoe, however stylish and durable, is worse than useless, it's harmful unless it fits. It may cripple the foot. A school may be more harmful. It may cripple the brain, one's habits and attitudes toward life.

Maladjustment we find everywhere about us. Maladjusted personalities keep our police and psychiatrists busy. One reason for this is what we have done to the child. Instead of fitting the school to the child, we have attempted to fit the child to the school, a Procrustean process that has resulted in mutilating the personality.

If all boys and girls were alike, then the same type of school and education would fit all equally well. But boys and girls continue to be born different, and in spite of our best efforts to make them conform, to mold them to our heart's desire, they continue to show individuality. Thank Heaven.

THE DIFFICULTY OF WISE CHOICE

There are thousands of private schools, over a thousand private boarding schools. There are perhaps half as many resident secondary schools and junior colleges that may be worthy of consideration on the part of the discriminating. It is not easy for the earnest parent to select a school to which the boy or girl will look back in later years with more gratitude than do those who now write memoirs. With no restriction on expense and with a real understanding of the boy or girl, it is still a difficult task.

But with care and discrimination, a school can always be found that will meet the need of each child. After a long career in dealing with the product of the private school, I have for the last two decades been helping parents to find private schools in which their boys and girls can make the best adjustment toward their future lives.

It is appalling how often well meaning parents and guardians send their children to expensive but inferior schools. Sometimes it is the result of false representation, of advertising lure or high pressure salesmanship that they are so defrauded. Too often the school is chosen on hearsay or on the recommendation of one who has no real knowledge. Later the children, feeling that time and money have been wasted, are resentful not only toward the school but toward their parents.

PITFALLS FOR PARENTS

Once the local minister was relied upon for guidance, educational as well as spiritual. Today he is not so much called upon for up-to-date information. Of trustees and alumni one must also beware. Too often they may have a financial interest.

Most of the 'Associations', 'Bureaus' and free lances, masquerading under high sounding titles, that used to take commissions from schools for securing enrollments have abandoned the practice. But, astonishing as it may seem, commissions are still paid by schools, otherwise reputable, to some women agents. When a representative calls or endeavors to influence an enrollment, it behooves a parent to ascertain how much of the tuition money will be paid for this effort.

How, then, is one to select a school for a particular boy or girl that will not mutilate, frustrate, or pinch like an ill fitting shoe? There are only two ways of learning about a school—from the outside and from the inside.

THE OUTSIDE VIEW

Unfortunately many school catalogs are misleading. Some are deceiving. To a parent who studies a group of catalogs seriously they are often puzzling. Some of the long established schools publish no catalog, and it is only with the better schools that the catalog statements can be relied upon. The self-seeking, commercialized school will often publish an elaborate document. The catalog of a poor military school is usually bulky and pretentious. Too often school catalogs are sales advertisements.

Many schools put up a good front which is found to be a hollow sham when seen from within or behind. Here is a school that makes a brave showing in its catalog, which offers every kind of course, every variety of outdoor activity. Even a cruise, all expenses paid, is thrown in. That it occupies a leased hotel doesn't appear as you drive up to it and see the beautifully landscaped grounds. Behind the scenes one learns that the man at the head has left behind him a trail of unpaid rents, taxes, bankruptcies. Teachers are hired on small salaries, on short tenure. High pressure salesmen follow up leads brought by the advertising and are paid large commissions.

Parents often get their first information in regard to a school from advertisements in newspapers and magazines. Many excellent and discriminating schools are still carrying announcements in some of the high class magazines, although the old blatant large space advertising has passed except for the highly commercialized southern military and finishing schools. In relying upon school advertising consideration must, of course, be given to the character of the magazine and the discrimination it uses in admitting schools to its columns.

THE INSIDE VIEW

An outsider may learn something about a school by talking with the head. Too often it will be about fatuous theories vacuous aims and futile ideals never to be achieved. One may visit the school, see bricks, desks, and activities. The trained eye will see much that the unaccustomed will miss. Pupils and instructors together will inevitably reveal something of underlying relations. One can usually detect whether the pupils are occupied in vital accomplishment or plodding doggedly through outworn, dry routine.

It is from the inside that one gets the most valuable information. The disgruntled trustee, the retiring head master, the dismissed teacher or the expelled boy, violently prejudiced as they may be, often give some true insight as to what is wrong, who pulls the strings, to what purpose, how much of a figure head or puppet the head master may be.

A JUDICIAL VIEW

It is safe to assume that all statements made about a school are in some degree colored or prejudiced. Only by comparing enough varying statements in which diverse prejudices neutralize each other may one arrive near the truth.

For twenty years Mr. Sargent, assisted by a resident and visiting staff, has been using this comparative and scientific method of studying the schools. Everything that has been put forth by the schools has been studied and filed. Detailed reports by visitors and parents on all the more important schools have had consideration. Information has come by word of mouth from teachers, trustees, parents, both the disgruntled and the pleased. And all this information and testimony from scores of sources is sifted and weighed each year.

In response to inquiries a blank is sent on which may be presented a detailed picture of the boy or girl, his past schooling and needs. Schools are then suggested for investigation, or when the parents wish more definite suggestions, photographs, letters, school records are requested and studied. This helps to an understanding of how the pupil will fit into a particular school environment. Where a positive recommendation is desired, an interview is necessary with the parents and the pupil separately, after which there is seldom any hesitancy in recommending the one school that will best fit the situation.

GUIDANCE FOR PARENTS

Perhaps the most intense desire of American parents is to help their children to a better education than they themselves had. To this end they seek guidance,—from ministers, priests, neighbors, college officials. Frequently they are referred to this Handbook. They find it, and eagerly scan it, in libraries, information bureaus, college offices, bookstores.

They look up the schools of which they have heard, using the Index. The Table of Contents points them to schools in the region they prefer. The Classified Lists help them to find schools to meet their particular needs. They write for catalogs and information or make a preliminary choice and visit the school. With perhaps a hundred thousand of these Handbooks available for consultation, the number of families thus aided each year must be considerable. Annually over a long period of years, an average of a thousand families have written, telephoned, or come to this office for additional information or advice.

MEDDLING IN SCHOOL AFFAIRS

In a lengthy review of the last edition of this Handbook in The Social Frontier, November, 1937, Thomas H. Briggs, professor of education at Teachers College, Columbia, remarks: 'Though no specific statement is made to that effect, the book is presumably intended to aid parents in selecting a private school for an offspring . . . It is difficult to see how parents can get much help from the data presented when they are attempting to select a school'. Contrasting the account of Putney School, Vermont, and Farmington School, Connecticut, he infers that the difference in treatment is due to the fact that one school "advertises" and the other "does not advertise in the Handbook".

"The mischievous meddling by the people in school affairs" was deprecated by Professor Briggs in his Inglis Lecture at Harvard, January, 1930. In our review and comment on his published lecture, "The Great Investment, Secondary Education in a Democracy", in the 1929-30 edition of this Handbook, we pointed out that his one thesis was "that education should be considered as a long term investment by the state that it may perpetuate its own interests", and added "Professor Briggs' conception of education is that of the pre-war Prussian Junker . . . The theme in the Inglis lecture which did most to get the headlines was his call for the suppression of every private school. He would even suppress Lincoln School of Teachers College. Perhaps he would suppress Teachers College and Columbia University which are privately, not tax, supported".

PARENTS DO USE THE HANDBOOK

How widespread is the use of the Handbook by parents seeking information about schools is evidenced from the letters that come to us from all these United States, Canada, European countries, Turkey, Syria, the Philippines, Hawaii, China and Japan.

From Perugia, Italy, Mrs. F. M. Guardabassi writes, "At the American Consulate in Rome I saw your Handbook of Private Schools. I would be very much obliged if you will send me a copy." She has since called and consulted us a number of times about her children.

Mrs. Lorrin A. Shepard, Istanbul, Turkey, writes, "Your Handbook of three or four years ago which helped us to select Dana Hall for our daughter and Deerfield for our son is perhaps too out of date to give us the essential assistance we need in finding the right school for our younger son . . ."

From Mexico, Mrs. S. B. Wright writes, "Your 'Private Schools' has long been used in our household along with the Bible, the Encyclopaedia, and the Dictionary as a sure reference and guide." From California, P. G. Rutherford, former Educational Director of the U. S. Navy, "... enclosing check for your new Private School Directory . . . have used it for many years in selecting schools for the sons of naval officers." From Boston, Neal O'Hara, "The summary of boys' and girls' boarding schools in America . . . has become a sort of Bible to my wife." M. B. Keenan writes from Cambridge, "I do not need to interview more masters of schools. I borrowed your Handbook and went through it thoroughly. It is a masterpiece. I could praise it by using other language, but the word I used includes everything that might be said of it." And from Connecticut, Judge E. B. Hamlin writes, "Miss Hall, whose school my daughter attended four years, sent me your book . . . I shall commend your publication to others, and have already done so to two families who are considering schools for next year."

Mrs. Thurlow Gordon, New York City, who has consulted us over a period of ten years for schools for her children, asks, "When will your new Handbook be out? The only one we still have is the 1932-33 edition. We had a later one, of course, but someone has evidently borrowed it and not returned it. Please send me a copy as soon as it is published for I want to look up junior colleges for my daughter."

THESE INTRODUCTIONS

What should education do? What should schools do to prepare children for their future? These introductions annually attempt to survey what is happening on the frontiers of knowledge that may affect the next generation. With better understanding of what is doing in the world, with broader horizons, parents should be in a better position to decide what is best for their children, to evaluate what educational institutions offer.

The responsibility is the parents'. They cannot escape, however they may delegate their functions. Teachers in the last analysis are merely mothers helpers. Schools and colleges must supply what is demanded.

Our blind faith has led us to accept education as offered without much thought of what it was doing to our children. As the disastrous result has become apparent, a more critical and discriminating attitude has developed. We are fed up with "philosophies of education" which too often are mere apologies or excuses for a traditional program, often as meaningless as the lazy boy's excuse, "I have a bone in my leg".

OTHER SURVEYS

But why should it be necessary to introduce here such a survey? Isn't all this available elsewhere? There is an enormous output of writing on education. But little of it is helpful to the buyer or consumer, the parent or the child. Most of it is trade stuff, hardly more professional than that of the astrologer.

There are hundreds of surveys, weary volumes, dealing with methodology and administrative detail. In his Surveys of American Higher Education, The Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching, 1937, Walter Crosby Eells lists more than 600 surveys dealing with 1900 higher educational institutions. 233 of these have been published, totaling 40,000 pages, at a cost of $3,000,000. They were produced by salaried or subsidized "educators" at a cost twenty times as great. Further he refers us to Smith's bibliography of more than 2500 references to school surveys.

This surveying of current methodology, financed chiefly by the great foundations, still goes on without throwing much light on what might be of significance for the next generation. As director of the Cooperative Study of Secondary School Standards, with an appropriation of $200,000, Mr. Eells in the past two years has studied 200 secondary schools with the purpose of determining "what are the characteristics of a good secondary school", "how does a good school develop into a better one".

"The Advisory Committee on Education" of twenty-two lay members, appointed by President Hoover, under the chairmanship of Floyd W. Reeves, is studying the "Federal relationship to State and local conduct of education".

RECENT TRENDS

In the early editions of this Handbook, when education was more nearly static, the past was the thing to talk about. These introductions were then largely historical. With accelerating change and the shifting scene so confusing to many, it has seemed increasingly important to interpret the advanced thought of the day.

In the edition of 1933-34 attention was given to the "increased freedom in bringing to light defects and pointing ways to better methods in the teaching of civics, history, economics and all that has to do with national and social welfare". The search was to discover "What Knowledge is of Most Worth" in this modern world.

The changing world, education for a new social order, social reconstruction, were topics in the 1934-35 edition in which were recorded more changes than had taken place for many years past.

Propaganda was coming to the consciousness of educators in 1935-36. A great number of books had been published on the subject which led to some examination of "How We Get Our Ideas", "Why We Think So", "The Power of the Press".

The keynote of the last edition was given by the Harvard Tercentenary and the meeting of the British Association. At both there was a new tendency to face realities, to challenge our culture, to adapt science to human needs. This led us to take account of stock of human resources and to study some the methods by which stupidity is perpetuated and teachers made timid.

THE EDUCATIONAL LAG

This year the keynote is fear. Hope seems to have faded. Education lags. Serious minded men in high places look to education as the only means of saving our world. President Raymond Fosdick of the Rockefeller Foundation in "A Review for 1936" wrote, "There can be but little question that a serious lag has developed between our rapid scientific advance and our stationary ethical development, a lag which has already found expression in the greatest tragedy of history".

Listening in at commencements, inaugurals, annual conventions of professional and business leaders, we should be able to learn if their hope in education is justified.

REPORTING AND INTERPRETING

"The future of America is in the hands of two men — the investigator and the interpreter", writes Glenn Frank. "We shall never lack for the administrator, the third man needed to complete the trinity of social service. . . . A dozen fields of thought are today congested with knowledge that the physical and social sciences have unearthed, and the whole tone and tempo of American life can be lifted by putting this knowledge into general circulation. But where are the interpreters with the training and willingness to think their way through this knowledge and translate it into the language of the street? I raise the recruiting trumpet for the interpreters".

Reporting at its best makes clear the position of the reporter. Interpretation must be from a fixed and definite view point. So the reporter or the interpreter if honest will show a personal slant and reflect his own backgrounds, but will suppress his prejudices and avoid giving opinions. Here it will be apparent it is a biologist speaking who sees all human problems as matters of development and growth, who with paleontological vision peers back over the long course of life on this planet. But reporter or interpreter must keep in mind those for whom he is working. He may be as superficial or profound as is necessary to hold their attention.

University professors who know all the answers in their own specialty and dare not look over the fence into the next compartment will regard all this as superficial. If school masters find here ideas of interest they are welcome.

These pages are for parents. They are written for the hundred thousand discriminating families who want the best for their children, who at some stage are patrons of private schools and colleges. They like to have their imagination stimulated and are capable of wider reading and deeper thought than is habitual with them. But they will not read this because of a sense of duty. They are not taking a college course. The academic style of writing, qualified and cautious, would not hold our readers. They have other things to do.

There may be exaggeration. When attention is centered upon a thing its importance is magnified just as an object under a microscope is exaggerated. There may be distortion. Perspective makes objects at greater distance seem smaller, near at hand, larger. Perspective is to be desired. The important thing is to discover relationships, broad horizons, rather than the minutiae in which professors in their water tight compartments luxuriate.

Relationships will become more apparent the broader our range of phenomena and the longer our vision. We may discover how things came to be as they are. When we know how an engine is put together we are in a better position to repair or improve it. If we knew more about children we could better direct their education.

The raw data is here served up in a way to lead the reader to celebrate. Opinions are of little value. Authority is a thing of the past. We must learn to use our own brains as well as our own feet. Most of the opinions that people cherish and defend are second-hand or inherited prejudices. Those who ooze opinions should be treated lightly.

A FASCIST ATTITUDE

In his review, previously cited, Professor Briggs gives evidence that he values his own opinions. Perhaps others do. He writes of this Handbook, "The lengthy introduction is composed of expressions of opinion. . . . Certainly they cannot help parents. . . . Apparently they are included here because there is no other place for publication and the author likes to see his opinions in print. . . . He is courageous, bold, or impudent, according to one's point of view, in condemning men in high places . . . dogmatic comment without obvious justification grows increasingly tiresome. . . . Fortunately nobody has to read the Introduction."

Other critics protest his review. "Unkind, unfair." Thurman Arnold writes, "indignant at the silly, supercilious review on your book in the 'Social Frontier'." They fail to realize that for years we have been 'riding' Professor Briggs for his fascist attitude toward education and democracy. He was entitled to take a 'swat' at us, and this is his first attempt at a comeback.

PARENTS RESPOND

"I especially enjoyed your opening remarks, and shall treasure the Handbook as I have two more daughters in the market for schools later on", writes Mrs. M. E. Harrison of San Francisco. "Please mail me a copy of the latest Handbook. I can't resist the temptation to read the Introduction", writes Mrs. J. C. Moore, Cambridge, Mass., who for ten years has consulted us about schools for her children. "If the 'Introductory' Chapters were less entertaining and their educational marrow less advanced and stimulating my old copy might appear stale and my struggle to get your new editions at the School of Education a hardship", writes Mrs. Charles Tirrell, Andover, Mass. "I have read with great relish and much profit your observations on the subject of schools and education in general, in the forepart of the book", writes R. J. Caldwell, New York City.

ACADEMIC TRIBUTES

"Stimulating reading . . . a service to education", writes

Professor Goodwin Watson of Teachers College, Columbia, who has frequently quoted from these introductions. "A beautiful job and one that ought to have a lot of influence", Professor Thurman Arnold of Yale calls them. "Should be read and pondered by every would-be intelligent parent who has a child to educate . . . invigorating and thought-provoking . . . deserve high praise for transforming what might seem a commercial venture into a cultural event", is the way Professor E. A. Ross of the University of Wisconsin characterizes them.

ANTHROPOLOGISTS AND OTHER SCIENTISTS

"Exciting reading", Robert M. Yerkes, Yale Laboratories of Primate Biology. "Most stimulating", E. A. Hooton, Harvard. "Encouraging words", B. Malinowski, London. "I like immensely the flavor", Kirtley F. Mather, Director of Harvard Summer School. "Strength to your arm", Oscar Riddle, Carnegie Institution of Washington. "I can think of no better way of measuring the changes which have occurred in educational thought since leaving the United States, almost two years ago, than a glimpse into your Handbook", writes Margaret Mead from Bajoeng Gede, Bali, August, 1937.

AUTHORS, EDITORS, REVIEWERS

"Read with great approval and many a chuckle", Stuart Chase, New York City. "Read with delight and admiration", John R. Tunis, Rowayton, Conn. "Read it with interest", Eleanor Roosevelt, White House. "Invaluable source book of pregnant quotation, and an equally invaluable bibliography of liberal writing and thought . . . I wish every parent could read it understandingly, and I would like to stand most university presidents and head masters of schools in a corner, dunce caps on their heads, and keep them there until they had learned your book by heart. A magnificent production", Struthers Burt, Jackson's Hole, Wyo.

"Exceedingly stimulating . . . its challenging liberal point of view is, in my opinion, all too seldom found among men intimately associated with education, and desperately needed", Alan R. Blackmer, Phillips Bulletin, Andover, Mass. "Contains a hot introduction telling the snobs where they belong. . . . Sargent wants a renaissance of leadership and praises the new spirit of educators who are demanding intellectual freedom", Harry Hansen, New York World-Telegram and syndicate. "Terrifying to the philistine, paralysing to the prim", C. P. Ives, New Haven Courier. "Pithy, vigorous and illuminating", Clara G. Stillman, Brooklyn Daily Eagle. "Searching comments on the educational scene", Millicent J. Taylor, Christian Science Monitor.

HEAD MASTERS AND HEAD MISTRESSES

"Have read the latest copy of Private Schools as usual with the keenest interest. . . . It maintains the excellent standard set for it many years ago. . . . I suspect that on most phases of education we think very much alike. . . . At any rate, I am glad to imagine that this may be so", Claude M. Fuess, Phillips Academy, Andover, Mass. — "From high Olympus you look upon the educational scene with a wider horizon than almost anybody else of whom I happen to know", Frank S. Hackett, Riverdale Country School, Riverdale, N. Y. — "I have always read eagerly your understanding, fearless, and honest foreword as each new volume appears", J. M. Hubball, Great Neck Preparatory School, Long Island. — "Enjoyed your crisp and pointed remarks on various phases of education", H. A. Nomer, Shady Side Academy, Pittsburgh.

"Best thought-out and most constructive material on current educational problems . . . information that can be depended upon to answer in a responsible way the many questions which naturally come to the principal's desk", Stanley R. Yarnall, Germantown Friends School, Philadelphia. — "The first one hundred and seventy pages . . . amazing . . . The one question is whether such a treatise on education and educators has a place in the book or should be published by itself", J. D. Allen, Polytechnic Preparatory School, Brooklyn. — "You have certainly brought together a vast amount of challenging information", Morton Snyder, Rye Country Day School, N. Y.

"Parents are sending me the clipping on your new Handbook from the World-Telegram. You have stirred them into thinking. You have startled them . . .", E. E. Langley, Edgewood School, Greenwich, Conn. — "I have always enjoyed and admired the freshness and daring of those front pages. I always find myself hoping that they are read and feel sure that they could not fail to prove stimulating", Mrs. Lewis D. Bement, Bement School, Deerfield, Mass.

HUMAN AFFAIRS, 1938

Turning his gaze toward the earth after a lapse of some million years and observing the bipeds swarming in spots in the valleys and at the river mouths, he queries "What has been doing?" A biped replies:

The first million years have been the hardest, since we came down from the treetops. If you saw Martin Johnson's film "Borneo", the troops of monkeys in swift airplane flights from tree to tree, the three hundred pound orang swinging from a branch like a pendulum to get momentum for a sixty foot leap to another tree top, you will realize how great a success we had achieved in brachiation in our tree top life.

But this swinging through the trees with the greatest of ease did not equip us to walk around on the hard old ground and we developed something of an inferiority complex before we became steady on our hind legs.

Meantime we have seen ice ages come and go. In the eon that is past we have learned to master fire. We have split the atom into neutron and proton and may yet train the moron. We have devised a lot of things from bow and arrow to radio but more important we have invented a set of explanations which we have to keep changing as we find the old don't work.

SUNSPOTS AND HUMAN ENERGY

Now in 1938 we approach a maximum sixty-eight year period of sunspots, electrical storms which affect all life, we are told by Harlan True Stetson, research assistant at M. I. T., in Sunspots And Their Effects, Whittlesey House, 1937. The cycle of sunspots affects cycles in human activities, the quality of vintages, the number of Hudson Bay pelts, the volume of building, the price of stocks and other things Stetson shows.

This sixty-eight year periodicity was worked out by H. H. Clayton, formerly of the Blue Hill Observatory "from a long and elaborate analysis of all the sunspot numbers available from 1750 to 1910". From data sixty years old he has been able to prophesy the number of sunspots years in advance.

Another record was broken in human observation March 26, 1938, when observers at Mt. Wilson reported a fiery cloud of hydrogen and calcium gas that shot up from the surface of the sun 970,000 miles, two-fifths the distance to the moon. The greatest height previously observed in September, 1937, was only 625,000 miles.

THE EARTH ESCAPES COLLISION

On the night of October 30, 1937, while the earth was speeding on its way, eighteen miles a second, we missed by five and a half hours, collision with another smaller and reckless planet going twenty miles a second. Previously unknown, it is now named Hermes. Had the young upstart fallen into mother earth's lap there would have been such earthquakes and such tidal waves as the earth has not known since the moon leaped from the Pacific basin, as W. H. Pickering first postulated in 1902.

Perhaps it was this that broke up the crust so that the continents, with their plant and animal life have been drifting as Alexander L. Du Toit tells in Our Wandering Continents: An Hypothesis of Continental Drifting, Oliver and Boyd, Edinburgh, 1937. It is fifty million years since the earthworms of South Africa and the southern tip of South America parted company, an average of less than five inches travel a year.

MAN MULTIPLIES

Within a few years man for the first time has passed the two billion mark, the maximum number of the species yet attained. We have learned to increase food supply and lessen the death rate from disease. Thousands of other species have become extinct. Man has played a part in killing off some of them but meantime has developed new ones. The pekingese and the mastiff would be considered as such if found in nature.

Cosmic rays, new to human consciousness, we find affect our genes and bring about new variations and perhaps species. Chemical hormones from our glands, and now made in the laboratory, change our behavior, and control human nature which we once believed unchangeable. Human breeding, now haphazard and aimless, will then perhaps be less disastrous to the race. At present tabus which prevent the more ignorant from limiting birth are resulting in a degradation of the quality and intelligence of the species.

TABU AND FOLKWAY

We are discovering tabus, previously unsuspected as such, which affect our everyday life. First discovered among the South Sea Islanders by Captain Cook a century and a half ago, we have only recently learned to what extent our own behavior is controlled by tabus.

Folklore, too, we have learned is not confined to the primitive and ignorant peasants. Thurman Arnold in his "Folklore of Capitalism" within the year has shown how controlling a factor it is among our leaders in business, government, and education.

Insanity in all its varieties has increased among the species. One in twenty now in our schools will be mentally or socially maladjusted, mental or criminal cases. Psychiatrists and semanticists are just beginning to discover how far the old folkways and tabus still held are responsible.

Suppression, of natural tendencies and impulses, in which the schoolhouse plays a part, sends an increasing number to the bughouse. Violation, we still treat as delinquency or crime and route them to the 'pen'. With a cleaning up of the mental debris in the minds of those who control, these maladjustments may eventually be corrected.

LEARNING ABOUT MAN

"The Proper Study of Mankind", Pope's eighteenth century slogan, within two years has been adopted by the Rockefeller Foundation as its program. "The Review for 1937", outlining the future program, plans to shift expenditure for research from the field of physical health to mental health.

The Foundation has discovered that "medicine includes psychiatry" pointing out that until recently only "occasional leaders in medicine suspected . . . mental and nervous diseases . . . as diseases at all. Witchcraft . . . resulted in torture . . . admission was charged at Bedlam, the London madhouse, to those who wished to amuse themselves with the spectacle of the violently insane".

So man's greatest mystery, man, is beginning to yield his secrets through patient study.

RULING AND FOOLING

Slavery and serfdom, the means of getting others to do the dirty and heavy work, under the lash, has passed recently. There have been no serfs in Germany since 1830, in Russia since 1860. In our own country indentured white servants knew the brand and the whip until the thirties, blacks until the sixties.

Authority, divine right, supernatural rewards and threats no longer control. It is cheaper to fool 'em than to rule 'em. We use newspapers. "The omnipotence of the press is perhaps the most dangerous disease which infects free institutions today", writes Joy Elmer Morgan. "The intellectual classes have been debased by the immense spread of newspapers, cheap literature, radios and cinemas. Unintelligence is becoming more and more general", (Alexis Carrel, "Man the Unknown").

We fool 'em with modern fetishes, democracy, national honor, manifest destiny. Fuddled and fooled, the masses look to leaders whom the shrewd promote, then pull the strings.

WAR

Our species is still predatory. The more aggressive accumulate the results of others' labors by force or personality or intellect. They take the products of the soil or the mind from others. Some intelligence, crafty, deprives. Some intelligence, inventive, bestows. Gladly we reward the intelligence that increases our productivity. When men, groups, or nations take more than they contribute, there is discontent, a feeling of injustice, that leads to rebellion, or war. Large portions of humanity are still held not by democratic plebiscites but by naked, brutal force. But war is not so lethal as when Caesar, in a day, destroyed by sword a whole tribe, 750,000, penned between two rivers.

Again the world hears the sound of "ancestral voices prophesying war". Hungry and prolific peoples are challenging the formerly aggressive who conquered the more docile, seized their wealth and lands and are now fattening on the spoils.

RETREAT OF THE WEST

The white man for four centuries has strutted and imposed his inflated ego on the other races. Today Europeans are in retreat from Asia, commercially, culturally, politically and territorially. Dr. No-Yong Park, Ph.D., Harvard, in his Retreat of the West, Hale, Cushman and Flint, 1937, with humor and liveliness tells the story. From the dawn of history the Asiatic overran Europe, bringing culture and religion. Rome conquered Asia Minor but was powerless before the Scythians of Asia Major. Asiatic hordes overran Europe and destroyed Rome and during the last thousand years they reached the plains of France through Spain and across Europe and later thundered at the gates of Vienna. But the European with his scientific advance in matters material should be able to give the Asiatic a large handicap, however he may excel in the esthetic and spiritual.

REVERSION

Species have come and gone. For a hundred and forty million years dinosaurs in their might and power dominated the earth. The clam remains unchanged, a stand patter. Other species have reverted, gone back on their course, retreated from the sunlight to the caves, or underground.

Our human species has come a long way in a hundred thousand years, but now in a time of inevitable change, when vision and guidance will count most, our leaders are confused, our loud speakers jittery. Our great universities, which should be sharpening the edge of youth to cut through the confusion in these times of change, have fallen down on the job.

Craven leaders in panic are counselling retreat, back to medievalism, feudalism, to authority and obedience. Back, back, they cry, when the way is forward.

Most bipeds feel the impetus forward and, rid of the sense of sin, the consciousness of guilt, the inferiority complex which has held them down, they may yet attain that paradise, that heaven, long yearned for.

CAN EDUCATION SAVE THE WORLD

The founders of our country knew, preached and wrote that democracy could be made to work only if we had a people educated and trained for that purpose. But we have forgotten about that. We have not been faithful to the trust they placed in us. Busy exploiting a continent, we ourselves have been stupidly exploited. Now the time of awakening is at hand. We must face reality or cease to be a democratic people.

In the present state of the world, what we do with children and youth is vastly more important than in quiescent, normal times. With everything changing about us, the future will belong to those who are prepared for it. What that preparation should be depends upon the immediate environment.

EDUCATION CAN BE MADE TO WORK

In Japan a few, in order to perpetuate their control, suppress thought as dangerous and cultivate the myth of the sun goddess and absolute obedience. In Russia the Soviets use education to build a pre-conceived social order and those trained in this system make the world safe for Stalin. Hitler has magnified the ego of depressed youth in his revised system of education and training and continues the inevitable century long process of unifying the German peoples. Mussolini, beginning with the six year old 'Wolves of Fascism' has 'dewopped the wops'. He has made poor Italy a first class power.

In these autocratic countries youth have their chests out, their tails up. The training and conditioning process of youth accomplishes its purpose. Education has become a first line of defense. The autocrats know that each child is an asset and must be successfully trained or they go under.

WHAT ARE OUR PRIVATE SCHOOLS AIMING AT?

In our free and democratic country objectives are not so clearly defined. We can still afford to indulge in platitudinous and hypocritical bunk. Prejudices, traditional practices, inherited attitudes, programs, we parade as 'philosophies'.

Our private schools for the elect have always been the pace setters. They have demonstrated the value of educational methods and created popular demand for them. Only after long battles were the tax payers forced to support universal public education. And so we have education free to all.

But in our best private schools is education still free to grow, to change? It should be. It must be if it is to adapt itself and prepare youth for a changing world.

BLIND FAITH

Pitiful are the sacrifices that parents make to enable their children to be subjected to the institutional processes which in apology we call education. Bitterly we are coming to doubt its value. President Hutchins at Chicago, June, 1937, said,

"The community has had a child-like faith that from institutions of learning some leadership might emerge. The results to date have hardly justified the ecstatic hopes. . . . Taking the country over there is little evidence that its college and university graduates as such have ever done, said, or even thought anything which suggested that they could be singled out to lead the way in improving the education, government, or character of our people."

Our educators don't know what to aim at. From twenty-five possible purposes of education, presidents of three hundred colleges and universities were asked to number in importance. Manners, personality and character ranked high. Mental discipline came twenty-second. A generation ago it would have been first. Actually, most go to college to get into the higher income tax brackets.

NO CHARITY

"Helpless in the grip of economic and social forces too large and overwhelming for them individually to cope with, five million young people are out of school and jobless", Josephine Roche, then Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, told the Wellesley commencement gathering in 1937. Many "make a clean breast of adult failure and inability to make the world a fair and hopeful place" and admit, "We've made a mess of it".

"We have no time to waste if our schools are not to go on delivering year by year fresh hordes of ignorant, unbalanced and uncritical minds, at once suspicious and credulous, weakly gregarious, easily baffled and easily misled into the monstrous responsibilities and dangers of this present world. More cannon fodder and stuff for massacres and stampedes", H. G. Wells said at the British Association in 1937.

VAIN HOPE

"It may possibly be that we have gone too far already—that nothing can restore the world to sanity." Surveying the sorry state of the world, the threat to our democratic dream, Head Master Fuess, in his commencement address, June, 1937, uttered these words to his departing Andover seniors. "But I am quite sure that our chief hope lies in arousing in young men a sense of community responsibility. Even education may not save the world, but if it cannot, nothing else can."

COMMENCEMENT WISDOM

This education that may 'save the world', what is its sum and substance, where may one hear a true confession as to its ideals and purposes? Perhaps at the commencements where after four years of guidance the great of the university are saying their last words of farewell,—at such a time the last words imparted should be straightforward and revealing.

THE UNIVERSITIES DOMINATE THE SCHOOLS

The great preparatory schools like Andover and Exeter, even more than the lesser schools, reflect closely the ideals from above. But all are dominated by the standards imposed upon them. Head masters and teachers are college trained, stamped and branded with the essential degrees.

Their pupils follow the pattern of studies laid down by the colleges for entrance. That there have been hundreds of changes in the pattern in the last three decades never shakes the confidence of the colleges and universities that they are now right, however wrong they may have been in the past. That the requirements of some other are different can only mean to the authorities of a particular one that the other is finical.

Youth so selected, the colleges and universities hold for four years in the hollow of their hands. Theirs is the sacred task to transmit to the elect of the generation the best of our human heritage, the wisdom of the past, to prepare them for the future leadership of their fellows.

AT THE HARVARD COMMENCEMENT

The beacon light of learning, which had flickered murkily while Lowell was making Harvard safe for Back Bay youth, was at the Tercentenary blown into a mighty flame by President Conant. But at the 1937 commencement he wearily fell back on safe generalities. There was little attempt to revive the heroic attitude.

Conspicuous in the Yard were the flaming, flaunting robes of Cardinal O'Connell, upon whom was conferred not the D.D. or the Litt. D., but the LL.D. This was but just reward for standing so valiantly for years at legislative hearings against the Child Labor Amendment with President Emeritus Lowell and Bishop Emeritus Lawrence, in whose ancestral mills he labored as a child, as he tells so bitterly in his "Recollections". The following Sunday the Cardinal staged with military pomp another Roman Catholic spectacle in the Harvard stadium, state and city officials attending.

Of the commencement speakers, Dr. Edmund E. Day, the new president of Cornell, attempting to buck up and reassure his hearers, said, "I venture to believe that . . . Harvard . . . will face its responsibilities . . . The American people will continue to look confidently to the great universities of the country, and assuredly to this oldest of them all, to justify mankind's growing faith in intelligence, in its never-ending struggle with the forces of prejudice and passion".

Dr. Walter Cannon, speaking somewhat apologetically for the Tercentenary Conference on Human Behavior, did not fail to hold the note there sounded of optimistic idealism. "What can be done to improve human behavior? Here, at last, we confront the most important frontier of all. Here is the supreme challenge." We have "depended too largely on speculative thinking. . . . Certain it is that there exist potent biological factors which shape our ends, that theorists have not dreamed of".

Former Governor Winant of New Hampshire, fresh from his social security labors at Washington, addressing the Phi Beta Kappa, also showed realistic awareness of the needs of the time and the functions of the university. "It is the task of our men of learning to explain the needs of the future to those who fear to lose the hard won gains of the past and to direct the building of those who would have only eyes for the future to rest their works on the solid foundations of the past . . . The great economic and social forces which have been sweeping over us in these last years ask more of us than of any previous generation."

LIBERTY, DEMOCRACY, AND ALL THAT

At Amherst, Chief Justice Hughes orated, "Democracy . . . must guard the fundamental blessings of freedom . . . Foremost is the need for truth which consists of thoroughness and precision . . . Resistance to propaganda, demagogues and zealots of all kinds must be checked by a thorough training in emotional and moral stability and knowledge of the fundamentals of democracy."

At Brown University, too, the words that fell from the lips of the Chief Justice were equally original, characterized by the same straight thinking and downright sincerity. To frustrated youths all over the land, from the mouths of a hundred orators, the same time worn phrases may have sounded like meaningless platitudes. Specific suggestions as to how to use democracy, how to make it work, which might stimulate youth to action, were avoided, as befits a scholarly atmosphere. It would not do to inflame youths to enthusiasms that might interfere with some trustee's or donor's established rights and privileges.

'Liberty' can always be used to stir the blood and stultify the brains of socially inferior students or laborers. "Liberty is a weasel word. In the first place it is never liberty but liberties. In the second place liberties, if they are more than empty phrases, are not negative; they are positive . . . The problem is one of the coordination of civil liberties with economic regimentation." No one said this at commencement. It comes from Dr. Joseph A. Leighton, head of the department of philosophy at Ohio State University, whose most recent book is Social Philosophies in Conflict, Appleton, 1938.

EVADING REALITY

From such a survey one comes back with few pearls among the handfuls of 'dead sea ashes'. Men heroic in their youth played safe in their commencement addresses, protecting pelf and privilege as if to prove that Henry Sloane Coffin, president of Union Theological Seminary, was right in saying at Wellesley, "Truth-seeking and truth-speaking are the luxuries of the safe".

Fear of intelligence was voiced by Dr. Charles N. Arbuckle, pastor of the First Baptist Church, Newton Center, at the Northeastern University baccalaureate. He said, "If we give free play to our intelligence, untempered by wisdom and high idealism, we may produce only moral anarchy . . . Jesus may not have been qualified to graduate from any one of our modern colleges, but He brought something into the world without which the learning of all the colleges and universities in the world today is a menace rather than a hope".

George E. Vincent gave the Amherst Alumni Council insight into one policy to be followed in choosing commencement speakers. "By associating only with like-minded people one has a sense of intellectual activity without encountering those conflicts of ideas which might bring on an attack of reflection".

A FRAUD UPON SOCIETY

"If we are not serious about training the mind, if we do not do this job well, we shall do no job well. A university that fails in this perpetrates a fraud upon society", eloquently declared President Dodds at Princeton. "And so Princeton provides for the undergraduate a miniature world in which he can learn to live, to lose, and to triumph". Some call it a country club. Evidently it's a self-admiration society.

"Training the mind" is a good old standby to fall back on. Failure or success is so hard to prove, and such varying standards can be applied. The researches of Dr. Learned in the Pennsylvania colleges fail to show that the college course increases the intelligence quotient or the fund of information. At the Phi Beta Kappa initiation at Tufts, Professor H. V. Neal informed them, "There are no better trained minds than those of Jesuit priests".

THE PERILS OF DEMOCRACY

At the Yale commencement President Angell declared, "Menacing shadows have already fallen athwart our path", liberty and democracy "are in peril in our land". "The dogmatic assurances of our political medicine men" failed to quiet his fears in regard to our "bastard democracy" and "the spawn of a decaying liberalism". Questioning the right of the majority to rule, he called for "protection of indefeasible human rights through . . . the courts". Compulsorily retired at sixty eight, he told the graduates he, too, dropping his "amateur academic standing", expected "to get a job after Commencement".

His baccalaureate provided headlines for the newspapers on the "rape of the Constitution" and his "stern criticism of labor". He "expressed confidence in the fairness" of employers, and made a "stirring plea for the return of youth to the philosophy of Christ". But Bishop Lawrence almost simultaneously was holding up Christ as a stimulus to youth. "Jesus calls us to blaze new trails and open up new areas of life as yet unknown".

FAITH NOT JUSTIFIED

Few of these speakers were blazing 'new trails' or opening 'new areas of life', though at the lesser colleges words of wisdom might have been heard. They in no way justified the implicit faith that the American people have placed in education. Some, it is true, realized that they had fallen down on their job, but most lost themselves in platitudes. These great educators are evidently intellectually starved or poisoned, reflecting prejudices and hatreds, the propaganda fed by a controlled press to create public opinion.

But does that mean that we shall give up the faith in education of the founding fathers, who looked to the schools to make democracy work? Or does it mean that we must repudiate our present education and educators and get something better? We must have vision, immediate worthy objectives, a revival of the heroic attitude, if we are to 'save the world'.

THE NEW PRESIDENTS

Winnowing the commencement addresses yielded 'a few grains of corn, mother'. The fall crop of inaugurals, of new presidential hopes and ideals, produced a little more.

A HEAVY TURNOVER

This year sixty-three new college presidents were inaugurated. Nine of the forty New England college presidents were replaced, a turnover of 22.5%. To reduce this, trustees more than formerly select relatively young men. But some resign to preserve their self-respect, like Tyler Dennett, whose rugged and honest independence ruffled his finance minded trustees.

Not long ago President Neilson advocated a "Be-Kind-To-College-Presidents Week", evidence that the president occupies no easy chair. Another, anonymously writing on "Prexy", Harper's, January, 1938, tells in a gossipy way, without scratching deep enough to reveal underlying causes, well worn stories of the difficulties met with by a score of presidents. John R. Tunis, author of "Was College Worth While?", in "College President", Harper's, February, 1937, deals virilely with these forces. He presents a pitiful picture of a brave young president standing for what is sensible and right, and as a result thrown down and out. He leads us to pity the poor college president who prostitutes himself to prosper.

INAUGURAL HOPES

"In the whole library of academic documents, none is more dangerous than the inaugural address", said Levering Tyson in his inaugural at Muhlenberg College.

Clarence A. Dykstra, successful city manager of Cincinnati, and hero of the recent Ohio flood, who succeeded Glenn Frank as president of the University of Wisconsin, writes, "I gave no inaugural address at the University; first of all because we had no inauguration, at my request, and second because I do not know how to make a pronouncement on education. I did give a charge to the graduating class in June and I spoke for ten or fifteen minutes to the first meeting of the faculty the other day. Neither of these talks is an attempt to box the compass in education."

Against alumnæ opposition, twenty-five trustees, mostly male, elected Roswell Gray Ham first male president of Mt. Holyoke. Though he had devoted his life to the study of Dryden, in his inaugural he tactfully went still farther away from the modern, confining his remarks to St. Paul and Plato, whom he links up with Mussolini and Hitler. Worrying about "Where exactly is the open mind to end?", he reminded us there is always "an area that is verboden, where speech itself is suspect".

Williams, Cornell, and Yale, on October 8 inaugurated new presidents, in impressive ceremonies, with the aid of prominent robed and becaped figures of the academic world. Speaking as though with one voice, they deplored the world situation, the dangers besetting their quiet, pleasant academic life.

PASSING OF THE PRIVATE UNIVERSITY

Dr. Edmund E. Day, in his inaugural at Cornell, where he succeeded the brave and beloved Livingston Farrand, safely generalized that the university should be the place where students may "improve their command of the difficult art of thinking", and discussed the forces that today make it so difficult for the universities "to maintain the primacy of the intellectual function".

Dr. Day, at Harvard the preceding June, on the occasion of receiving the honorary degree from Conant, had said, "Governments come and go. . . . The great university survives and moves on".

Conant, at the Cornell inauguration, prophesied the passing of the national selective university like Harvard, dependent upon the largesse of finance capitalists. "During the next century of academic history, university education in this republic will be largely in the hands of the tax-supported institutions. As they fare, so fares the cultural and intellectual life of the American people."

Conant recalled that Jefferson had hoped that the university might develop an "aristocracy of talent and virtue", appreciating "the necessity of culling from every condition of our people . . . and preparing it at the public expense for the care of the public concerns". Littauer's gift to Harvard of two and a quarter millions for a School of Public Administration provides an opportunity for Harvard to do this. "If the student bodies of the privately endowed colleges and universities are true geographic cross-sections of the country, these institutions can fulfill a unique and vital function in American education. . . . The second and perhaps more important function of a privately endowed institution is to act as an innovator and pacemaker."

WILLIAMS NOURISHES WHAT HARVARD STARVES

At Williams, James Phinney Baxter III in his inaugural asked, "Will the members of this Class of 1941 leave this valley better equipped than were the members of the Class of 1914 to master the problems of the business cycle, of democracy, and of the maintenance of peace? My own college generation failed to solve these problems, in part at least because we were inadequately prepared. What can we do in our colleges and universities now to help the next generation to do better?"

He demanded that "the American student . . . familiarize himself to some degree with both the content and the methods of the whole range of the social sciences". He had returned to his alma mater from Harvard, where he had been professor of history. How "Harvard Starves the Social Sciences" had been explained just a month before in The Nation, May 15, 1937, by Robert Keen Lamb, now on the economics faculty of Williams, who, disgruntled, had resigned the previous year from Harvard, where he had been director of publicity, and colleague of Sweezy and Walsh.

Baxter espoused Justice Holmes' "principle of free thought—not free thought for those who agree with us but freedom for the thought that we hate", and pointed out that in one year, 1935, "seventy-five gag laws of various sorts were enacted by the legislatures of forty-four states and in two of these states the mere utterance of opinion was defined as criminal".

"When one thinks of the cultural lag which is so striking a feature of modern society", he said, "it is clear that the tempo of intellectual life in American colleges and universities, already notably quickened, must become still faster". He quoted from President Eliot's inaugural address, "The notion that education consists in the authoritative inculcation of what the teacher deems true may be logical and appropriate in a convent, or a seminary for priests, but it is intolerable in universities and public schools, from primary to professional". He quoted Emerson, "Colleges can only highly serve us when they . . . gather from far every ray of various genius to their hospitable halls, and by the concentrated fires, set the hearts of their youth on flame".

In February, 1938, Conant, receiving the LL.D. at Williams, was introduced by Baxter as "a chemist who sought to unlock the secret of plant growth; now the leader in a more difficult and more important quest; how to advance scholarship and maintain liberty in 20th century America". Reflecting stress, Conant emphasized the necessity for a "balance of power between those within the academic walls and those without".

'LUX' ON 'VERITAS'

"We are consecrated to a scholarship that seeks the truth and illumines the truth with the light of freedom and spiritual faith. . . . 'To seek the truth' today is a dangerous occupation, and those who seek had best prepare themselves to endure the consequences. . . . The Yale atmosphere must be so completely impregnated with the sense of freedom that our students going from here will serve naturally and universally as its apostles."

This frank confession and complete adherence to 'truth' made by President Charles Seymour at his inauguration at Yale, should have thrilled his hearers. Very much in his mind must have been the recent unpleasantness over the matter of the dismissal of Professor Jerome Davis. "This action was taken upon recommendation of the Provost, Professor Charles Seymour, with the concurrence of the President", reported the special investigating committee to the Council of the American Association of University Professors.

Jerome Davis' "reappointment was refused, in part, because he accepted and expounded the views of Professor S. B. Fay on the origins of the World War—in other words, because he had regard for the facts. At the same time, Professor Charles Seymour, whom many competent authorities regard as highly reluctant to accept these facts, was made president of the University." (Harry Elmer Barnes, "History of Historical Writing", p. 287).

SYMBOLS AND PLEASANTRIES

Thurman Arnold, professor in the Yale Law School, writes of Yale, "The academic life was different from practice in that the scholarly heroes were men who dug up little sections of truth for the love of it—a purely monastic ideal. Yet this mythology was tempered and molded by the great overshadowing divinity, the American Businessman. Yale was doing what it could to search for truth in the same organized efficient way in which the United States Steel Corporation made steel."

To the college president goes the millionaire to get degrees and decorations. From the millionaire the college president must extract funds. In between, the professor is pinched and must conform. But new broom or old, it must serve its purpose. "The Higher Learning", as Veblen sapiently observed, manifests that "serene and voluble loyalty to the current conventionalities and a conspicuously profound conviction that all things are working out for good, except for such untoward details as do not visibly conduce to the vested advantage of the well-to-do business men under the established law and order".

THE BUSINESS OF RUNNING A UNIVERSITY

It isn't 'big business', running a university, but nervous business for the cloister-bred, pulled from laboratory or study. The 'little business men' of the college world meet in the Association of American Colleges, which counts 528 members. Three hundred representatives met at Chicago, January 20 and 21, 1938, and appealed to Congress to eliminate taxation on gifts, which have declined one-half in ten years.

The exclusive American Association of Universities is limited to the thirty or so private and state institutions with the most money to spend. The three day annual meeting at Brown University, November, 1937, developed more heat than light, and some foreboding shadows, but no suggestion as to how education might 'save the world'. Their interest was the rate of interest on their investments.

IMPERMANENT FOUNDATIONS

The topics discussed were mostly inside stuff, shop talk,—the effect of taxation on gifts, and how to invest money for higher yield. Some institutions have now put forty per cent of their endowment into common stocks.

The passing of the private university, as prophesied by President Conant, will be accelerated by the wasting away of endowments, and the diminishing return. Morgenthau and other wise men have set a new fashion of leaving their money to be spent, not hoarded. The Rockefeller Foundation, realizing the impermanence of investments in these changing times, is providing that specific grants may be spent for other purposes after twenty-five years. But Rhodes, the Boston grocer, hopefully provided in his 1937 will that his estate shall accumulate. When, some centuries hence, the amount of the principal is $100,000,000, the income is to go to the Gordon College of Theology and Missions. Such is the impotence of the dead hand.

In "Endowments in Jeopardy," Atlantic, December, 1937, Edwin W. Kemmerer, Princeton economist, explains how in Germany all endowments were wiped out, in other countries diminished, and points to the dangers in this country. But he doesn't recognize with President Conant that all universities will eventually have to be tax supported.

The Promises Men Live by, Random House, 1938, by Harry Scherman, president of the Book-of-the-Month Club, makes clear that our whole culture, all endowments, bonds, bank notes, are merely promises. He reminds us that government bonds are generally destined for repudiation. The total amount of all corporate and governmental promises to pay, in 1929 amounted to over 200 billions. Since then much of this has been wiped out through bankruptcies, repudiations, and reorganizations, and the value of the remaining debt scaled down by the reduction in the value of the dollar. How much of this debt incurred for former follies our grandchildren will pay, no man can figure out.

SEYMOUR SLAPS CONANT

President Seymour, in the presence of the President of Harvard, which had just received two and a quarter millions from Lucius N. Littauer, the glove man, for a Graduate School of Public Administration, "warned against developing departments of contemporary economics and political science at the expense of the classics, philosophy, literature and kindred subjects" (School and Society, November 20, 1937).

"I know of no evidence", he said, "to indicate that a man will make a better Secretary of the Interior, or a better collector of customs, or a better citizen, as a result of having concentrated upon the study of Government than if he had concentrated on the Greek and Latin classics". Let us hope that Yale doesn't staff its cancer research, for which it has recently received ten millions, with those who have "concentrated on the Greek and Latin classics", nor that President Seymour patronizes a dentist who acquired his proficiency in the practice of blacksmithing.

Some months later, Professor Cecil Driver of Yale, turning toward Harvard, made the same face. "Government workers should learn to govern within the government itself—they should be apprentices." The Harvard Alumni Bulletin adds, "A few decades ago this was said of law, medicine, teaching, and business".

But though Yale may continue to train future statesmen on Greek and Latin, Princeton, the Universities of Minnesota and Pennsylvania, New York University, Radcliffe, and the National Institute of Public Affairs, all provide for training in government administration and public management, generally in cooperation with local state and city government.

WHY CLASSICS AND PHILOSOPHY?

But Seymour's attitude is common enough. Even Conant, the scientist, in his 1936 annual report had deplored the increased demand for the social sciences on the part of the students, who were deserting the classics. Hutchins, a Yale man now at Chicago, in his "The Higher Learning" had said, "All there is to journalism can be learned through a good education and newspaper work. All there is to teaching can be learned through a good education and being a teacher. All there is to public administration can be discovered by getting a good education and being a public servant". He found comfort in quoting Aristotle's Politics, "The same education and the same habits will be found to make a good man and a good statesman and king".

Light is thrown by the great British economist and sociologist, John Atkinson Hobson. He writes, "Where the elements of civics, politics and economics are introduced . . . care must be taken to keep them inoffensive by confining them to descriptive information, or, if any controversial issue is introduced, to a balanced statement of the pros and cons. While it is admitted by most thoughtful teachers that a living interest in history and in social institutions would be best evoked by an intelligible account of current happenings and the present-day working of these institutions . . . this rational process is banned by its very merit of rationality."

"WINTERGREEN FOR PRESIDENT"

President Hutchins of Chicago was nominated for the presidency of the United States, according to an AP dispatch, February 24, 1938, by Sinclair Lewis before a distinguished audience in Washington. "He is authentically a great man", the story teller said, "the kind of man who could face Stalin, Mussolini and Hitler and make them a little ashamed". The books Hutchins prescribes for the students of today, Sinclair Lewis has remarked elsewhere, would be "a full cultural fare . . . for a hermit".

Hutchins is looking for authoritarian sanction. The Church is ready to receive him into its bosom, as it does those who would avoid the confusion of this world. He would be sure to get the Catholic vote. W. F. Cunningham in The Catholic Education Review, January, 1938, quotes with exultation Hutchins' words, "Without theology or metaphysics a university cannot exist", and continuing in the style of Hutchins, adds, "The aim of higher education is wisdom. Wisdom is knowledge of principles and causes. . . . A Catholic university . . . places theology at the center of its whole intellectual system, but any theology worthy of the name must have a metaphysical basis."

THE BOOKS ON THE BUSINESS

These college people do a lot of talking. Some of it is warmed over and served up in print. Recent books by college presidents are mostly small talk about small business.

Shaking the presidential dust of Yale from his feet, James Rowland Angell publishes in American Education, Yale University Press, 1937, recent addresses and articles. He holds that the essence of a liberal education is "intellectual curiosity", but couldn't approve Jerome Davis' snooping about in the ways of "Capitalism and Its Culture", 1936.

Dr. Butler of Columbia annually acquires a new crop of degrees and produces a new crop of volumes. Always engaged in 'the pursuit of truth', which for him is just around the corner, in The University in Action, Columbia University Press, 1937, he reprints his annual reports from 1902-1935. In his report of 1917 he said, "There is no real reason to fear that academic freedom . . . is or ever has been in the slightest danger in the United States". That was the year he and his trustees, overcome by war hysteria, threw out Cattell and Dana and caused Beard and Robinson to withdraw. In The Family of Nations, Its Need and Its Problems, Scribner's, 1937, Butler reprints thirty-one addresses and articles, and rejoices that the killing of the Child Labor Amendment shows what the 'democratic' people of the United States can accomplish when aroused.

Recently coming from Lawrence College to the Brown presidential chair, Henry M. Wriston, in The Nature of a Liberal Education, Lawrence College Press, 1937, exclaims, "The curriculum is the educational jungle", and gushes that a liberal education is an experience similar to that of love or religion.

In The American State University: Its Relations to Democracy, University of North Carolina Press, 1937, Norman Foerster, of the University of Iowa, maintains that it "has progressively tended to subvert the higher interests of American democracy". Naturalistic science has depraved us. We must go back to the Middle Ages with Hutchins. Foerster as well as Hutchins comes in for much commendation and high praise from the Catholic Church.

At the meeting of the Association of American Colleges, speaking for the little college, Foerster said, "If the large universities continue to pander to the materialistic and humanitarian forces in our society, they may well give the small liberal colleges a wonderful opportunity . . . What they offer is only too similar to what, it is said, the public utilities should offer: cheap power, cheap service."

The authors of the above books are strong for discipline. So is Hitler. All give lip service to 'academic freedom'. But Alvin Johnson, recently appointed professor at Yale, claims, "We have a right to demand of our leaders in government, business and labor, fair evidence that they are functioning like good mechanics, not chewing the rag on our time. But let us resolve not to look for miracles."

Many of these men who are running our greater universities, in their speeches and books seem out of contact with the modern world. They have little to offer to the youth of today, little to contribute to the future of our nation. While they guide education, aren't the results likely to disappoint Head Master Fuess?

DOCTORS, LAWYERS, . . .

The man in the street wouldn't expect any very practical advice from these college people on how to 'save the world'. He would advise us to look outside to those whom he is in the habit of paying for advice,—doctors, lawyers. . . . They have had eight or more years of university training and should know what education can do. Each profession has its national association, which includes the higher up of its priestcraft. What do they talk about at their annual meetings?

THE MEDICAL PRIESTCRAFT

The American Medical Association is the voice of 106,000 U. S. doctors. The 9200 members in attendance at the Atlantic City meeting in June, 1937, were confronted with a two volume survey prepared by Esther Everett Lape of the American Foundation, financed by Mrs. Mary Louise Curtis Bok. Carrying the recommendations of 2000 doctors for improving the state of medicine, it emphasized the importance of health to the state, and outlined a plan of federal cooperation. Fishbein, who dominates the association, roared opposition, referring to "the tradition of medicine since the earliest times". Two days and a night the convention wrangled,—what would the doctors get out of this?

Following the convention, 430 'renegades', leading hospital surgeons, led by Drs. Richard C. and Hugh Cabot and Dr. Henry A. Christian, signed a nine-point manifesto, embodying the reforms suggested by Dr. Hugh Cabot,—“Let the Government pay school and hospital deficits, provide medical care for the indigent”. (Time, Nov. 15, '37). This was inspired by the success of state medicine in Russia, as revealed by Dr. Henry Sigerist of Johns Hopkins, in Socialized Medicine in the Soviet Union, Norton, 1937, and by Michael L. Ravitch in The Romance of Russian Medicine, Liveright, 1937.

The medical priestcraft has had many hard whacks recently. Medical men in "their dual role as priests and business men . . . the exclusiveness of their craft . . . resistance to change . . . severe reprisals against 'renegades'" are dealt with, among the other professions, by Ellis Freeman in his "Social Psychology". "It is a very myopic medical science which works backward from the morgue, rather than forward from the cradle", Hooton, Harvard anthropologist, told a group of medical men, cf. 21st edit., p. 71.

"Splitting fees with shady colleagues, prescribing useless nostrums and profiting from the numerous nursing homes which exist only to gouge wealthy hypochondriacs" (News-Week, September 13, 1937) is devastatingly dealt with in The Citadel, Little, Brown, 1937, by Dr. A. J. Cronin. The author writes, "Worst of all perhaps are the specialists—typified by the word 'Harley Street'—who exploit the rich, scratch one another's backs to their mutual profit, in some cases make fortunes on the side by performing hush-hush abortions for careless socialites" (Time, September 13, 1937).

Dr. Hugh Cabot, in a letter to the publishers of Cronin's book, writes, "There is no important situation which he draws, the counterpart of which cannot be found in this country and probably more frequently". And that goes double, Dr. Cabot adds, for the much discussed practice of fee splitting, "which I confidently believe is very much less common in England than it is here".

CORPORATION SERVANTS

"Once lawyers had clients, now corporations have lawyers." Verification of this came from the Kansas City meeting, October, 1937, of the American Bar Association, where the leading men of the craft spent four days in venting their rage in diatribes. They bewailed the passing of the time when this country was "a government of lawyers and not of men".

The association voted to let up on their long fight against the Child Labor Amendment. The rule against participating in economic and political controversies was honored in the breach, for, as Brooks Adams pointed out in 1913, if the Supreme Court should lose its power to pass on the constitutionality of legislation, the bar would lose half its income and three quarters of its importance. It could not be indifferent to such catastrophe.

In an effort to "blow off some anti-New Deal steam" (News-Week, October 11, 1937), President Stinchfield dwelt on Roosevelt's hatred for the bar, and ex-Senator Reed, who hates the president, ranted, "An honest fanatic . . . is the most dangerous beast ever turned loose to curse the earth". Senator E. R. Burke wailed at "the welts of the lash on . . . the lawyer . . . with back bared at the post". President Hutchins of Chicago "stripped the delegates of their self-respect and professional hocus-pocus" (The Nation, October 9, 1937).

With little help from the professions or the college presidents, we turn to the universities in action to see what the faculty is doing with and to the undergraduates.

FRUSTRATING THE UNDERGRADUATE

"A release last April from the Harvard University news office announced, 'Dr. P. A. Sorokin, chairman of the Department of Sociology, has completed a survey of "the social and cultural movements of the last 2,500 years".' The publishers' blurb proclaimed it 'unrivalled for brilliant analysis, breadth of scope, fertility of ideas . . . startling in its originality . . . Sorokin, one of the greatest social philosophers of our day, holds the answers . . . Pitirim A. Sorokin emerges at 48 a sociologist worthy of the company of Comte, Spencer, Ranke, Pareto, Weber, and Spengler'.

"With great expectations, we waded into Sorokin's three volumes, anticipating all the 'answers'. But like the lad who 'Joined the navy to see the world, What did we see? We saw the sea.' 'Painstaking scholarship' there was, but instead of 'fertility of ideas' we found sterility, the 'interpretation' one of palsied fear, the 'startling . . . originality' a ratiocinated Oriental fatalism, the 'explanation of forces' an admission of defeat, a call to retreat."

ORIENTAL FATALISM

This and the following quotations are from an article in The Social Frontier, November, 1937, written at the suggestion of the editor, George W. Hartmann, who asked for "a straightforward major article on . . . the work and influence of . . . Demia-shkevich and Sorokin—the latter is a particularly formidable menace."

"There are a number of these frustrated White Russians who with charm, brilliance, enormous erudition, and agile ratiocination, are exerting a great influence in intellectual circles in this country. Nostalgic, men without a country, unable to appreciate what their former countrymen are achieving, all they most cherished has been swept away, their faith destroyed. Life for them holds no purport. Baffled, they have turned back to medievalism. Their pessimistic Oriental mysticism seems to make a strong appeal to some American youth and academic sophisticates who in the present confusion are unable to see any roads ahead."

In the field of religion, Nicholas Berdyaev, writing on The Destiny of Man, Scribner's, 1937, preaches the same mystical yearning for a return to medieval authority as in his, "The Fate of Man in the Modern World", two years before, and many others. His use of psychological and scientific terms deludes the fuzzy minded. He would lead us back into the confusing maze in which we wandered through the middle centuries of our era. Opening his last book at random one reads, "The spiritual, mystical church is the Christianized cosmos, the soul of the world endowed with Christian grace, and the state, like everything else, is a part of it, though a part the least gracious and Christianized, the most subject to the power of sin and therefore of law."

In education there are the "essentialists", who seem to be reverts with medieval minds. They "ganged up" at the N. E. A. meeting at Atlantic City, March 1, 1938. John Dewey dismissed them as "an imitation of the fundamentalists". William Heard Kilpatrick incisively said, "The astonishing thing is that the reaction of the essentialists is so small and comes from such inconspicuous people". Most articulate among them is the White Russian, Michael Demiashkevich, who gives courses in the Harvard Summer School. His Introduction to the Philosophy of Education, American Book Company, 1935, is an irritating example of anachronistic and wasted cerebration. Contemporary educational practices and processes are "viewed in the perspective of the history of philosophy", casting suspicion or contempt upon anything recent. In this case, philosophy seems to be a frustrate's defense, a camouflage to hide his fear and confusion, an excuse for not facing what's ahead.

SOROKIN'S DEFEATISM

In sociology Pitirim A. Sorokin manifests the same defeatism, the same prejudices, intense enough to be called hatreds, in Social and Cultural Dynamics, American Book Company, 1937. It is an "enormous compilation of facts, marshaled in tables and graphs". A great number of collaborators, predominantly Russian, assisted including students of Harvard and Radcliffe. All knowledge is classified as of three kinds,—'sensate', derived through the senses, from observation, the material of science, which is later referred to as 'epicurean' or 'sensualist'; 'ideational', which is characterized by the prejudiced adjectives 'sublime', 'profound', 'unfathomable', the sort of knowledge that has been incorporated in most mystic and religious beliefs, that doesn't depend upon our senses or observation, that is intuitive,—faith, 'the substance of things hoped for'; and third the 'idealistic', which is pictured as harmonizing the ideational and the sensate.

"The cellophane of scientific method in which Sorokin wraps his classified data transparently reveals his pseudo-science. Facts have been searched out, selected, regimented, compressed, expanded, distorted to supply a prop for a predilection. Imposing tables and graphs are based on isolated sociological facts, single elements of human behavior. They are classified without consideration of what brought them into existence or what causes may have been modifying them at the time. He sees no great or dominating personalities (biological sports) stamping a period with the pattern of their own minds. He finds no causal explanation of the social or cultural changes". (The Social Frontier, November, 1937.)

QUESTION-BEGGING

"The reviewers are a little awed by the prestige of Sorokin's position, the money invested, the erudition, the labor. His colleague, Crane Brinton, with passing contempt for James Harvey Robinson, Charles Beard, and Arnold Toynbee, and with a condescending word of praise for Spengler and Pareto, mildly rebukes Sorokin that he 'sprinkles his three volumes with graphs and tables, in the traditional manner of the sociologist aping the physicist'. What the 'nineteenth century called scientific methods' and Sorokin regards as 'sensate degeneracy', Mr. Brinton contemplates with a superior disdain, although he admits 'there really isn't any need nowadays . . . to nourish hatred and scorn towards the scientist'.

"Arthur Livingston, translator of Pareto, gingerly takes a swift sideswipe. . . . Lewis Mumford pours scorn upon the 'insensate ideologue' whose 'blind vanity causes him to fall into a bigger hole of his own digging'. Ernest Sutherland Bates detects 'question-begging adjectives', distortion of chronology to make facts fit fluctuation. 'History, as pictured by Sorokin, resembles the spinning of a cosmic roulette wheel' . . ."

UNDERGRADUATES START PROTEST

Undergraduates look to the social studies as a means of finding solutions to present problems. The more intelligent and mature, concentrating in these so-called social sciences, manifest great discontent with the futility of many of the courses, the timidity and pettiness of many of the professors.

The Harvard Guardian, a journal of protest recently started by undergraduates, in its November, 1937, issue published reviews of Sorokin's work by three Harvard professors, which were written at the instigation of the Guardian. A. P. Usher, professor of economics speaks of "this vast treatise, . . . in fact a singularly arbitrary and dogmatic interpretation . . . essentially anti-evolutionary". D. W. Prall, associate professor of philosophy, from the standpoint of art, points out that he "would confuse sensate mentality with empirically verifiable good sense. . . . Sorokin is all along pleading for faith in the manifestly incredible". William Yandell Elliott, professor of government, says, "Even the most elementary knowledge of the dangers of statistical methods would lead one to view with scepticism, if not with horror, the proof of his pudding". His "method is Procrustean . . . Professor Sorokin's inspection, by a tabular method, of wars and revolutions does not give me, at least, the feeling that this method has any significance."

WARPED FOR LIFE

One who knew Sorokin before he came to Harvard writes, "He is a very good man 'gone off' on an impossible tack . . . a man warped for life by his experiences in the Russian Revolution. . . . Instead of his warping diminishing with the lapse of time, it is increasing".

And as if intent on proving the truth of the above, in a radio address, December 8, 1937, as reported in the Harvard Alumni Bulletin, Sorokin said we will be "more spiritual, more idealistic, more just, and more Godly", after passing through the terrors that lie ahead, "stern, bloody, and destructive". But first, our social values must become "less relative, more idealistic, and more absolute". Our trouble is that in "art, science, philosophy, religion, ethics, law, or social institutions", we are in "open revolt against the dominant forms and trends of the preceding centuries". The old Russian novelists depict perfectly horrible "trends" under the tsars.

Vaughan Wilkins' And So Victoria, Macmillan, 1937, fails to give us an alluring picture of "trends" under the corrupt Hanoverians. His Endless Prelude, Routledge, London, 1937, is made up of quotations from private contemporary documents, letters and the like, beginning with Victoria and going back a thousand years, "the easier to accustom ourselves to those strange human animals that were our ancestors". It is a progressively horrible picture, more 'stern and bloody', less 'spiritual, idealistic, Godly'. It is doubtful if Professor Sorokin, or any of us, would enjoy having dinner with our ancestors of even a few centuries back.

CHALLENGE TO HARVARD

How Sorokin 'got that way' is apparent from his writing. To a semantic psychiatrist he is 'sick'. His mind is confused, filled with fear, preoccupied with words and labels, as he shows in The Social Frontier, March, 1938.

But Harvard is maintaining him in a position of influence where he is misguiding and frustrating American youth and academic sophisticates. The attitude of defeatism, of surrender, the failure to live up to a heroic role on the part of our university leaders, is the greatest threat to our immediate future, our civilization, our culture. Harvard students need heroic leadership, the example of those who in this present apparent chaos will not turn their backs but march face forward.

STARVING THE SOCIAL SCIENCES

At the Harvard Tercentenary, President Conant declared, "Those of us who have faith in human reason believe that in the next hundred years we can build an educational basis for a unified, coherent culture suited to a democratic country in a scientific age".

Some day we may have a science of society. Science has a lot to tell us about societies of plants, corals, ants, and man. There is a growing science of man, biological, anthropological, archeological.

"The so-called 'social sciences', which include education, are in their infancy. For example, there was not a single professor of economics in the United States before 1871. Consider how recently whole new vistas have been opened to our view and how little opportunity there has been as yet to explore these fields," Conant said to the Cincinnati Chamber of Commerce Forum, February 22, 1938, the Harvard Alumni Bulletin reports.

'Science' is a pretentious word for education and economics, which still show their origin from philosophy and theology, and still lack a large body of accurate observation and definite measurements. 'Social studies' would perhaps be more appropriate.

INCREASING DEMAND

The very newness of these subjects, their possibilities, the fact that they deal with problems of which we know so little and should know so much, is reason enough for the increased demand in the schools and colleges for such knowledge as we have. The enormous literature on the subject is summarized in Teaching the Social Studies, Theory and Practice, Heath, 1937, by Edgar Bruce Wesley. It is largely based on the sixteen volumes of the Commission on Social Studies of the American Historical Association.

There is a new history, enlarged by the archeologist and the anthropologist. There is a new economics, enlarged by experience and experiment, which destroys old theories. The demand for the new comes from below and without, and is opposed by the university history and economics teachers, who have their ideas set, their lecture notes prepared for the rest of their careers. The entrenched classicists and philosophers see the demand for their subjects diminishing.

Even progressives, like the scientist president of Harvard and the historian president of Yale, side with the "gentlemen rankers" against the intruders. They deplore the desertion of the classics, which reflect life and its explanations of two thousand years ago, for these newer subjects which endeavor to tell us something about how we came to be as we are today. It is the teachers of the social sciences, the new heresies, that get the universities into all kinds of trouble with their finance minded trustees, possible donors, and hired editors and commentators. College presidents have to be careful, and so far as possible confine students to subjects which cannot "feed a spirit of criticism and discontent with the respected institutions of today, because the antiquity of these studies makes them 'safe'" (cf. 21st edit., p. 38).

But in the face of this, President Conant declared at the Tercentenary, "There can be no compromise; we are either afraid of heresy or we are not. If we are afraid, there will be no adequate discussion of the genesis of our national life; the door will be shut to the development of a culture which will satisfy our needs."

BIRTH OF THE SOCIAL SCIENCES

When Harvard sought its first professor of 'political economy', which came out of 'moral philosophy', it took the editor of the Boston Advertiser, Charles F. Dunbar. The study of government is still more recent. President Seymour of Yale pours scorn on the study of what was once a divine right. In England that right has descended upon those who wear the 'old school tie', have felt the cane, been nurtured on the classics.

Harvard took the lead with courses in government under the history department and law faculty. A. Lawrence Lowell was first, appointed in 1897, to lecture on government alone. Lincoln Steffens and other 'muckrakers' stirred up interest in municipal government at the beginning of the century. In 1902 Harvard established a department, and in 1904 Professor William Bennett Munro began his course in municipal government.

All this, as well as how sociology and psychology came out of moral philosophy, which came out of theology, is made clear by Samuel Eliot Morison in his Three Centuries of Harvard, 1636-1936, Harvard University Press, 1936. It was the Reverend Francis G. Peabody's social conscience that led him to give his 'Social Ethics' under the philosophy department. Out of this came a School of Social Workers. "The advance of Sociology as a science was making the religious approach somewhat difficult to maintain in a secular university."

Dr. Richard C. Cabot's advanced stand on social injustices and his strictures on the ethics of the medical profession in Boston had made it more comfortable for him to cross the river, where he gave courses in 'Social Ethics'. When a more scientific treatment of sociology was pressed, Dr. Cabot is said to have remarked, "You can find all you need to know about sociology in the scriptures."

A faculty committee was set up to liquidate the old 'Social Ethics' department, and to bring into the Harvard world a new sociological baby. On the committee, which met weekly for several years, were members of the departments of psychology, history, economics, and anthropology. Burbank and his economics department, 'Economics Club' it is called, didn't care much if the operation proved unsuccessful.

Sorokin was discovered at the University of Minnesota. Ross, the Wisconsin sociologist, had brought him over to give a course of lectures, and he remained to study "the economic organizations of American farmers" (E. C. Hayes). Called to Harvard, his erudition enormously impressed some of the committee. To others, his seminar in experimental methods,—children in a sandpile, and voluntary contributions,—was puerile bunk.

STARVING THE BABE

So was born the unwanted babe, the new department of sociology, with Sorokin as chairman. Naturally the department has failed to develop normally, cannot hold its own with healthier departments in other universities. As an undergraduate concentrator remarked, "The sociology department is the White Russian WPA".

President Conant seems to appreciate the desirability of exploring the field of social sciences. But considering the personnel of the sociology and economics departments, one can not much regret his "announcement some two years ago which reflected his despair: for an indefinite period of time the budgets in the departments of history, government, economics, and sociology were to be 'frozen'. . . . Thanks to the rule of giving permanent tenure to all of the status of associate professor and above, the over-crowded ranks of older professors cannot be thinned. But promotions must be given to as few men as possible. . . . At the very moment when the largest number of Harvard undergraduates on record are demanding instruction in the social sciences, the university is limiting its offerings in these subjects. This is the policy of 'the student be damned'." (Robert Keen Lamb, The Nation, May 15, 1937).

"The undergraduates don't amount to much out there. They fill the seats and pay the fees," remarked one of them, concentrating in economics.

THE DOCTOR'S FEARS

"Appointing men to fill the posts of permanent tenure in the departments of the social sciences is President Conant's recurrent nightmare . . . The real reason for the university's awkwardness in its public relations is clear even to those on the outside. Harvard is trying to conceal from itself as well as from the public the disturbing fact that it is refusing the social sciences a chance to develop.

"The responsibility falls first on President Conant. It is an open secret that he is not sympathetic with the social sciences in the university and is out of patience with the self-appointed advisers who have undertaken to steer him through the intricacies of current opinion in the field."

President Conant's "confusion as a scientist confronting a pseudo-science is increased by his newly acquired tenderness as the responsible head of one of the largest capitalist institutions in the country. Harvard nurses an investment of more than $125,000,000. The natural bias of Mr. Conant's fellow-members of the Harvard Corporation is that of five corporation lawyers and a fashionable physician. They regard themselves as 'trustees' for the university's benefactors, committed to keeping costs, and therefore wages, down, and avoiding 'unfavorable' publicity." (Robert K. Lamb, The Nation, May 15, 1937).

TRAINING THE NURSES

Heresies today must be guarded against in the departments of economics and sociology as they once were in theological seminaries. They are best prevented by inbreeding and selecting. The departments are so organized that when there is an autocrat at the head he can be very autocratic, so that only bootlickers get on. Of course, they want brilliant young men who will make good researchers. But when the young instructor fails to play cricket, he is usually led to resign. Seldom is there a mess as there was over Walsh and Sweezy.

"The professors of today were the prematurely senile undergraduates of just yesterday, or the day before . . . For academic life is a system. Or a racket. Or a hierarchy. When it wants a professor Harvard doesn't often look out into the world for a bright young man who has 'done something'. Instead it breeds and raises its own. One becomes a professor not by being good, but by being a good boy. It is just that. I have seen it work, even in my time. You can watch it working now." This was written by undergraduate James Laughlin IV in The Harvard Advocate, December, 1937.

A wise faculty member, reading it, remarks, "Really, the half baked lucubrations of undergraduates should not be taken too seriously. Frustrated tutors instigate them. Everything is always wrong." Otherwise the tutors wouldn't have been frustrated. It's part of the vicious circle that is higher education.

BEWILDERMENT AT HARVARD

It is the teaching, not the man, the effect on the undergraduate, on the schools, on their faculty, on the world, that we are interested in. It is Sorokin's teaching that is damaging. Intrinsically an artist, mystic, scared, his personality and charm merely add to the misguidance and frustration of youth at a time when they need clarity of vision, inspiration, courage.

VOICES OF FREE MEN

The need to emphasize this point of view was widely appreciated. Arthur Livingston, translator of Pareto, wrote in regard to the Social Frontier article on Sorokin (cf. p. 53), "Your point of view is very sound, and very much to the point at this time, when the people at the higher levels of culture are surely showing signs of defeatism and bewilderment".

Some of the more vigorous and independent members of the faculty at Harvard, who, however, should not be pilloried for their outspokenness, wrote: "Enjoyed hugely . . . Agree heartily with most of it."—"I applaud warmly your critique of Sorokin sociology. That you should have been admonished, by one whom you call an 'aggressive and progressive professor', against voicing your views only proves how necessary it was for you to speak forthrightly. Courage of utterance has an infectiousness of its own."—"Your article was superb . . . I chuckled and grinned with delight."

ACADEMIC CAUTION

But most faculty members showed great caution when information was sought. Those who knew most drew their skirts aside. One wrote, "You will recognize my desire not to become involved in public controversy". Another, "You are denying the right of freedom in teaching and so playing right into the hands of the fascist elements".

The general feeling, on the part of Harvard professors who read the article, was that a colleague had been attacked and they must stand together. As Henry Adams observed, "The teaching profession is, like the church and the bankers, a vested interest. . . . The historians will fall on any one who threatens their stock in trade quite as virulently as do the bankers on the silver Men."

A member of the Corporation writes, "Any comment on my part might be construed as an interference with freedom of teaching. . . . I believe that criticism is more constructive when free from ill-natured criticism". Another writes, "I get somewhat fed up with the frequent statements or insinuations to the effect that Harvard's educational policies are determined with one eye on what will make present or prospective donors happy".

A TACTFUL PRESIDENT

To President Conant, as a matter of courtesy, advance proof of this article on the teaching of sociology at Harvard was sent, with a letter which read in part, "With the increased opportunities that the Littauer and Nieman funds provide for sociology and economics, you will, I know, be intent on strengthening both of these departments. . . . With H. G. Wells I believe, and I think you do, too, that our universities have greater opportunities for leadership and guidance of democracy than they have yet accepted."

President Conant tactfully and politely wrote, "I greatly appreciate your courtesy in sending me the advance proof of your article". With the heavy heritage he bears, it would perhaps have been inappropriate to express an opinion about an appointee under the regime of his predecessor.

MANAGEMENT NEEDED

An active member of the Corporation writes, "Frankly I don't quite get your point clear. You criticise Sorokin's tone and doctrine but is it your thought that the Governing Boards at the University ought to try to call him off or dismiss him or what? There are all sorts of doctrines and points of view represented in the faculty at Harvard,—optimistic and pessimistic, highly conservative and very advanced, etc. This being so, there must naturally be a large amount of disagreement with the views expressed by members of the faculty. But is there anything that ought to be or can be done about it? So far as I can see, there is not, because the essence of the place is, or certainly ought to be, free inquiry and free expression."

The above sets forth an ideal as to what should be, which has not been realized in the economics and sociology departments. The points made are problems of management, how to bring departments up to the ideal, with "all sorts of doctrines and points of view represented" and "free inquiry and free expression" encouraged.

The system makes it difficult for management. Once the full professorship is attained, a man may loaf or degenerate, and there is little chance for his removal. The younger men, not yet secure, as one of the older professors puts it, "are apprehensive lest they jeopardize their position by making statements which are reprehensible from the point of view of University administrators".

ACADEMIC FREEDOM, 1937 MODEL

At the Tercentenary President Conant's bold stand and brave words aroused great enthusiasm. For a quarter of a century, the more liberal alumni had looked back upon their old university as a safe retreat for moribund professors and the spoiled progeny of the Back Bay of that time. Now Harvard's young and liberal president was taking this great opportunity to commit the university to a forward course. No sales manager with announcement of new styles and models ever stimulated his customers more.

REACTION AND REPRESSION

It will be remembered he said, as quoted in the last edition of this Handbook, "We must examine the immediate origins of our political, economic, and cultural life . . . the forces of modern capitalism must be dissected as fearlessly as the geologist examines the origin of rocks. . . . On this point there can be no compromise; we are either afraid of heresy or we are not."

As the months passed, a change of tone, a more restrained attitude, became apparent. Soon he was making the same gestures as other New England college presidents, setting a pattern later to be followed all over the country, as if prescribed by the same drill master. His speeches, kept to 'safe' topics, harked back to Jeffersonian ideals and advocated measures that some characterized as of fascist pattern.

This change, reflected in the lecture halls and classrooms, undergraduate James Laughlin IV interpreted in The Harvard Advocate, December, 1937, as "Premature Intellectual Senility: Curse of Harvard". "Many must remember the sigh that rolled over the Tercentenary theatre when President Conant, with a slightly raised voice, declared that scholarship must probe the innards of the economic structure as well as the innards of the atom. That sigh represented much more than frightened selfishness".

PROTEST AND RECONSIDERATION

What had happened to produce the change which the undergraduates sensed, and which was manifested by the faculty as either timidity or rebellion?

The recalcitrant young members of the economics department, Walsh and Sweezy, when the last edition of this Handbook went to press (cf. 21st ed., p. 143), had been fired and all was well. Soon the rumble of protest began to swell. Headlines in the Boston newspapers and The Harvard Crimson kept the matter alive. At a meeting of the Cambridge Union of University Teachers, April 14, with more than a hundred members present, the Harvard Alumni Bulletin reports, a resolution was adopted which stated:

"Two of the leading members of the Cambridge Union of University Teachers, its president and one of the most active members of its executive council, have been simultaneously given notice of dismissal from Harvard. This action, we are informed, was taken by President Conant himself, in consultation with the Dean of the Faculty, overriding the recommendation of the Department of Economics that both men be reappointed to their present positions as three-year Faculty instructors. . . . In a press release of April 5, the University authorities stated that the dismissals had been made 'solely on grounds of teaching capacity and scholarly ability' . . . A later statement of April 12, while implicitly denying the thesis of the earlier one, fails to repair the damage already done".

WERE THERE BETTER MEN?

The president on April 12 stated to the Overseers, "The decision . . . does not mean that they are not good teachers, but simply that in the opinion of those within the University best qualified to judge there are others among their contemporaries of greater potentialities", (Harvard Alumni Bulletin).

A cursory examination of the forty-eight contributions to Explorations in Economics, McGraw-Hill, 1936, a volume in honor of Professor Taussig by his pupils, shows the two liveliest and most readable articles are by Walsh and Sweezy. They deal with things that seem of significance to the ordinary man of some intelligence. Walsh has since produced an outstanding book on the C.I.O., a live subject which demanded investigation and exposition.

It isn't disloyal to recognize that your university doesn't always have the best football team, professional coach, or economics department. A member of the Visiting Committee a year later, immediately after a meeting of the Economics Department, said privately, "They are all good men, but second raters. The chairman of the department is moribund. Economics is much more alive at other great American universities."

"The entire faculty of the Department of Economics is dedicated to a scholarly refusal to come to conclusions on any and all of the leading questions of modern economic life!" Robert Keen Lamb, a former member, tells us. But that is perhaps characteristic of university economists. Professor Arnold of Yale, not unacquainted with them, writes, "The American economic scholars meeting in Chicago every year have never been visited by observant men asking themselves the pertinent question: 'Why should such apparently intelligent men, when gathered in a group, attempt authoritatively to conceal the facts about political institutions?'"

The university and its authorities are not infallible like the Pope. An influential member of the faculty, who knows, writing about the Tercentenary symposium on Human Behavior, to which, as stated in the last edition of this Handbook, chiefly minor men were invited, writes, "I read with much interest your characterization of the Tercentenary . . . The Committee did not pick the best men to deal with the subject, but such men (among those chosen to receive degrees) as might make pertinent remarks. Ergo, the result".

WARMER WEATHER

A former colleague of Walsh and Sweezy, Lamb, in The Nation, May 15, 1937, wrote: "Once more Harvard has fumbled the ball. Once more the university in its dismissal of two liberal economics instructors, has exasperated its friends and delighted its critics by a clumsy substitution of one impracticable subterfuge for another. The ball has been passed from Economics Department to dean to president and back again in an effort to minimize the potential value to the university of its two most popular economics teachers, the only men in the department who have publicly shown sympathy for the labor movement. . . . No doubt Harvard's president considers himself a liberal. He has, indeed, signed several verbal blank checks saying, 'Here at Harvard we regard it as essential that all sides of the controversies in the social sciences be represented'. His checks have come back. . . .

"The incident illuminates the dilemma of the American university. . . . We 'feel' liberal, but we act tough toward liberals because we don't see how we can afford to act otherwise. . . . The university is being asked to face, publicly, the full implications of these dismissals and to say whether it is any longer interested in retaining its ancient distinction as a liberal institution."

Late in May an open letter to President Conant from a group of forty-two American Rhodes Scholars at Oxford, expressed "regret that Harvard has given cause . . . to fear that liberty of opinion is being curtailed". At Oxford they distinguish between 'academic freedom' and 'liberty of opinion'.

As the result of a petition made late in May by 131 junior members of the teaching staff, President Conant dumped the whole matter in the lap of an investigating committee. To this he appointed the nine more liberal professors,—Ralph Barton Perry, Chairman, Kenneth B. Murdock, Secretary, Arthur M. Schlesinger, Harlow Shapley, Samuel Eliot Morison, Felix Frankfurter, E. Merrick Dodd, Jr., Edmund M. Morgan, Elmer P. Kohler.

On the approach of commencement, the Harvard Corporation in place of the concluding appointments, granted Walsh and Sweezy two year appointments, without prejudice. Both have since resigned.

In his baccalaureate, June 20, to the seniors, President Conant was reported in the Boston Herald to have said there have been "few periods in America's history" when it was "more difficult to avoid conformity". He emphasized that "failure to think independently, clearly and unemotionally . . . was a constant and insidious threat to liberty".

To the Harvard Alumni Association on the 24th, avoiding direct mention of the Walsh-Sweezy affair, he said, "At each point in a man's career, when a decision in regard to him must be made, his reputation as a teacher and his published writings, if any, are merely to be considered as bits of evidence showing the quality of his mind".

TAKING TO THE HIGH SIERRAS

At this time he appointed to the Visiting Committee of the Department of Economics, then made up of corporation executives and their acolytes, four new men, all independent liberals, —Alvin Johnson, Roger N. Baldwin, Joseph P. Kennedy and John G. Winant. Soon after, it was made known that Alvin H. Hansen, outstanding economist, had been appointed Littauer professor of political economy in the Graduate School of Public Administration.

The president got away from Cambridge immediately after the commencement. June 27 he and his family left for the high Sierras. "They spent some seven consecutive weeks in relative seclusion" (David McCord, Harvard Alumni Bulletin, November 5, 1937), and before returning he had secured the support of the Western alumni in "thirteen speaking engagements, chiefly at Harvard Clubs ranging from San Francisco to Kansas City"

SECURITY, NOT FREEDOM

When, at a hearing of the Massachusetts legislature early in 1937, Raymond J. Walsh, Harvard economics instructor, expressed his "shame" that the President Emeritus of Harvard should continue to line up with the Cardinal and the Bishop in opposition to the Child Labor Amendment, he opened up a larger issue.

TIMIDITY

The committee of nine liberal professors appointed in May by President Conant, to report on the Walsh-Sweezy affair, had not been heard from until October. When it was announced that Professor William S. Ferguson had been appointed to take the place of Professor Samuel E. Morison, on leave, we wrote him October 29:

"What happens to Sweezy and Walsh doesn't so much matter. What happens to the professors that are left matters greatly. . . . There is more timidity and less freedom at Harvard today than there was under Eliot. It is for your committee to change this and win the gratitude of the intellectual world."

No reply was received from Professor Ferguson, but copies to others of the committee brought from one reference to the prevalent "academic passivity, like that of cows" Another replied: "It seems to me you put your finger on the most vital single aspect, to me at least, in the contemporary academic scene, namely, the caution and timidity of academics. . . . What you wrote to Professor Ferguson quite corresponds with my own observations and feelings, and I only wish that you had occasion to write what you wrote to Ferguson to President Conant. You may remember, in Henry James' Life of Eliot, the letter written to Eliot by Professor Emerton. It is good for the head of a great institution, who necessarily must have a restricted and limited view of the detailed forces which play about his institution, to have the benefit of a constant stream of informed critical outside opinion."

SUPPORTING CONANT'S LIBERALISM

Following this suggestion and quoting the above comment, we wrote President Conant, November 12:

"Your bold challenge and fearless stand at the Tercentenary and straightforward utterances on your Western trip, in contrast to the usual platitudes poured forth at university functions, commencements and inaugurals, are inspiring."

"Your appointment of a committee of liberal professors to report on the Walsh-Sweezy case, the nature of your recent appointments to the Visiting Committee of the Economics Department, give evidence of your awareness that the Departments of Economics and Sociology at Harvard need strengthening to maintain Harvard's standing in the academic world.

"With the tremendous burden you carry and the opposition that you must meet from those fearful of change, we who are enthusiastically in sympathy with your forward moves should be heard from. Recent correspondence with members of the above committees and other interested alumni and faculty members, confirms me in this belief. . . .

" 'It is going to be a long battle, against an opposition that extends far outside university circles', a nationally known member of a Visiting Committee writes, 'to get anything like the intellectual climate you and I regard as the only condition of health at Harvard. But if I am not mistaken Conant intends to create it.' "

President Conant's prompt reply was tactful. "I appreciate very much your taking the time and trouble to write me at some length about a number of matters concerned with Harvard University. I am always glad to receive letters from alumni, who manifest an interest in Harvard, and I read with pleasure their remarks whether they contain hostile criticism or friendly advice. It is a splendid thing for any university to have its graduates interested in the things that are going on along academic lines even if this interest sometimes takes a sharp critical turn."

FEAR FOR SECURITY

To give encouragement and support to the committee, with the prompting of other alumni we wrote to the Faculty Committee on Academic Freedom, November 20: " 'The fear psychosis is the factor determining the course of civilization today', Clarence Cook Little, '10, outspoken Harvard man, told the New England Council in Boston, November 18.

"As a somewhat detached observer of the educational scene and an annual reporter on trends in education, it is my job to review a wide range of what has been uttered, printed, and published. Under the titles, 'Keeping Teachers Timid', 'The Academic Mind', and 'The Control of Education', I reported in unacademic language on academic trends in the 21st edition of my annual HANDBOOK OF PRIVATE SCHOOLS, (pages 161-174).

"Lack of freedom to think and to speak will promote the fascist trends which some discern about us. Your committee has it within its power to make more difficult for those who would promote it in this country, the coming of fascism.

"All this I have put before President Conant, with the co operation of a number of nationally known alumni, but wholly on my own responsibility. We believe he deserves and will welcome support in his liberal tendencies. A copy of my last letter to President Conant is enclosed.

"Your report should encourage a broader and more liberal attitude not only on the part of President Conant, but of other university officials everywhere.

"So the eyes of many alumni and others throughout the world are upon your committee, their ears attuned for a report that will be outspoken, that will clear the atmosphere not only at Harvard but in other university centers, that will play its part in making the phrase 'academic freedom of speech' something more than a reminiscent platitude of times past."

ACADEMIC SERIOUSNESS

To the secretary of the committee, Professor Kenneth Murdock, enclosing the letter we wrote, "Expectation runs high as to the report your committee is to bring in. You occupy a strategic position and are capable of accomplishing great results. Let us hope that you will be courageously outspoken." He graciously acknowledged: "Thank you very much for the letter and the enclosures which you were kind enough to send us. I can assure you that the Committee, of which I am Secretary, is taking its task very seriously and appreciates your kindly interest in its work."

Copies of the letter to the committee were sent to the President, some members of the Corporation and Overseers, and Visiting Committee of the Department of Economics.

Several members of the committee appreciatively responded. One wrote: "Your letter was read to the committee. Your comments on the job ahead of the Committee of Nine will be given consideration by the Committee, I am sure. There is a colossal amount of work ahead of us; it will be months before we have properly analyzed the accumulating material. Whether or not the final report will be generally accepted as of high value, it appears certain that the existence of the committee, and the questions and answers it has incited, have already been a sufficient justification".

WILL THE CHALLENGE BE MET?

So there may be expected, after due academic consideration of this seemingly colossal task, a scholarly report on conditions of tenure, promotion, and advancement, resulting in a set of principles that may be influential not only at Harvard, but elsewhere.

It is to be hoped, however, that the report will speak out boldly in support of President Conant's advanced stand at the Tercentenary, that it will encourage members of Harvard and other faculties to live up to what he said, "We must examine the immediate origins of our political, economic, and cultural life . . . as fearlessly as the geologist examines the origin of rocks".

The president has taken an advanced stand. An alumnus close to him remarks, "The pressure on him can hardly be imagined". Another illustrious alumnus, very much in touch, writes, "I think that he has made some mistakes—mistakes due to inexperience rather than to wrong intent. After all, he is a young President and is in the process of being educated. My disposition is to support him now instead of criticizing him."

Another influential member of the faculty, to whom this manuscript was submitted, writes, "I have read the manuscript with much interest. It is, of course, written with some intention of irritating readers, and inciting thought and perhaps change. It will undoubtedly succeed on all these points." The reply was, "Your prescience as to the intent of the manuscript is appreciated. Your prognosis as to the result is optimistic."

The Corporation is made up of essentially liberal minded men. The Committee of Nine includes the most liberal of the faculty. These men on the firing line should receive support from the alumni, not passive but active. If only a few would speak out for boldness of thought and freedom to speak it, it might at this time have a very considerable effect.

"When the actual world is not at variance with men's belief, it is unnecessary to write or think much about it. People are not troubled by doubt in such times; therefore doctrine is not needed", writes Professor Arnold of Yale in his "Folklore of Capitalism". "Anyone who actually struggled for the liberties of actual individuals, rather than idealized ones was greeted with the hostility that greets anyone who tears the veil away from a great symbol."

An illustrious but sophisticated alumnus, familiar with the inner working of at least two great universities, wrote, "I am very much in sympathy with anything that can be done with reasonable hope of success to liberalize the attitude of those responsible for our educational institutions. I am, however, of the opinion that letters written to men like President Conant or Murdock do not influence their opinion or action one iota."

This is a defeatist attitude. The committee, officially representing the faculty, must of course observe the institutional mores, the ethics of their priestcraft. Their findings will probably be elaborated, bolstered and bulwarked. If they receive the support they deserve, they may boldly take the offensive. If in the great universities of the world we can't have freedom and courage, there is little 'hope for democracy'. Why leave bold, forward action to ignorant dictators?

KEEPING TEACHERS IN LINE

The whole trend of the American university under its present institutional organization, system of support and endowment, is to keep teachers in line. The procedure, suave or gauche, has that effect. What does it matter if a few scurvy fellows with wild ideas are thrown out? The important thing is to keep those who remain, in line, disciplined.

YALE, TOO, HAS HER TROUBLES

Yale hath her troubles that Harvard cannot cure. Jerome Davis had apparently been completely dismissed from the Yale mind when the last edition of this Handbook went to press (cf. 21st ed., pp. 67, 169). But in May new troubles began to pile up. The American Federation of Teachers, in a comprehensive sixty-page report on the dismissal of Jerome Davis, had shown that President Angell had taken this action "upon recommendation of the Provost, Professor Charles Seymour, with the concurrence of the President . . . President's attitude was influenced by alumni criticism of Dr. Davis' public speeches and other activities . . . Obligations of Yale University to Dr. Davis . . . not . . . discharged . . .", the special committee reported to the Council of the American Association of University Professors, after five months investigation. The Council declared that Jerome Davis' dismissal "was not justified and should be deemed a violation of the principles of academic tenure which must be maintained if freedom of teaching, of research, and of expression of opinion . . . is to be a reality. . . ."

While the Yale Corporation was in session on May 8, it was for the second time picketed by divinity students, protesting the dismissal of their beloved professor, joined by representatives of Dartmouth, Smith, Vassar, and other colleges, carrying forty large signs. A straight thinking member of the Corporation remarked, "Yale is no place to stage a frontal attack on capitalism".

The National Education Association reported in June, "The reasons given for the dismissal of Jerome Davis . . . are unwarranted and contrary to the weight of evidence . . . not valid. . . ." This was based on the investigation of the Tenure Committee, begun in November, which reported it had "received no cooperation . . . from either the president of Yale or the dean of the Divinity School". June 12 the Corporation meeting was again picketed by 250 teachers in cap and gown. Davis' salary was voted continued for another year.

SEEKING SAFETY

Freedom is something one becomes conscious of when it is denied him. Security, always threatened, is more often in mind. Not many college professors are conscious of being limited in what they write or say. Few have anything to say that anyone would want to restrict. 'Freedom' for them means freedom from worry, rather than 'freedom of speech'. They want 'security of tenure'.

"The average professor in an American college will look on at an act of injustice done to a brother professor by their college president, with the same unconcern as the rabbit who is not attacked watches the ferret pursue his brother up and down through the warren, to predestinate and horrible death. . . . The non-attacked rabbit would, of course, become suspect, and a marked man the moment he lifted up his voice in defense of rabbit-rights."

It is the voice of John Jay Chapman speaking, in "Professorial Ethics", 1910. He goes on, "Let a man express an opinion at a party caucus, or at a railroad directors' meeting, or at a college faculty meeting, and he will find that he is speaking against a predetermined force. What shall we do with such a fellow? Well, if he is old and distinguished, you may suffer him to have his say, and then override him. But if he is young, energetic, and likely to give more trouble, you must eject him with as little fuss as the circumstances will permit."

HIRING AND FIRING

The giants of the good old days were autocrats, hiring and firing at pleasure. Someone once inquired of President Seelye of Smith College, "Where is Professor Mary ——?" "Oh, I fired her the other day. She was impertinent to me." Nicholas Miraculous Butler, great peace advocate, under pressure from Wall Street trustees, when the war broke out, made no bones of firing his professors, Cattell, himself a crusty autocrat, and Dana, tender idealist, both of whom opposed the war, and making it so uncomfortable for others that they got out to maintain their self-respect.

Times have changed. "A subtler method than the old, crude procedure of summarily dismissing progressive teachers is employed by conservative university trustees and executives. To-day the usual technique is to take every precaution that no realistic or 'dangerous' men shall be added to the faculties, whatever their scholarly achievements or special capacity for efficient instruction. Thereupon, much ado is made about the complete freedom extended to this select and cautious teaching staff." (Harry E. Barnes, "Intellectual and Cultural History" p. 1142.)

DRY AS DUST

"The result is a great decline in the freshness, originality, vitality, and realism of instruction in institutions of higher learning. . . . Great educational endowments—'foundations'—have cooperated in this effort to promote academic docility. Under the guise of ultra-scientific rigor, their directors extol the spirit of research and condemn as unscholarly professors who venture opinions on current economic, political, or social matters."

Carlyle delighted in satirizing the dry as dust professors and the pabulum they served up, as does Barnes above (op. cit.). Look at the lecture notes of the professors, yellowed, thumbled, used for thirty years, as they drone over their sacred script. They have tried them out, they are 'safe'. Why take chances? And you can't remove the dead wood because of this fetish 'academic freedom' (security of tenure).

So the colleges are filled with little men who went into teaching because they got good marks, sometimes by bootlicking; with soreheads, once precocious or brilliant youths now gone sour; with snubbed Rhodes scholars, outstanding in their teens, who now hide inferiority complexes behind Oxonian snobbery. All sorts of men, scared, tamed, 'sick', appear in Academic Procession, Harcourt, Brace, 1938, in which James Reid Parker presents an anthropological study of Homo academiensis, among whom he evidently once went native. As at a faculty tea, we learn their patter, weaknesses, sillinesses, ponderous playfulness and awful archness, display of erudition. He shows why the students get so little from most of these men.

The little man with inferiority fears may blow himself up like the toad in the fable. One who has sat through many faculty meetings writes me, "The real trouble is that we are facing a situation in which dullards are in excelsis, in which a low cunning is mistaken for intellect. In faculty meetings, for instance, I am not so much discouraged by the timorous, as by those who are merely dominated by the desire for 'self expression', who are in fact nothing better than exhibitionists, trying to impress their colleagues with the fact that they really are damned clever and brainy men."

TAMED AND DULLED

Professors are timid, they don't want to be free, they want to be protected, Donald Slesinger tells us in "Professor's Freedom", Harper's, October, 1937. He draws on his experience as a professor at Yale and Chicago, where "there was fear, all right, and there was jeopardy, but tenure was the object of both the fright and the danger. . . . The plain conclusion my own experience forced on me was this: that, with few exceptions, the professors themselves were the greatest enemies of academic freedom. . . .

"In 1930 there were almost five times as many teachers in our colleges and universities as there were in 1900. . . . By 1930 university work was no longer a way of life; it was one of the easier methods of earning a living. The pursuit of truth became a search for security. . . .

"Our graduate schools and summer institutes were and are filled with earnest, hardworking, dull folk who look forward to a comfortable routine tempered with the excitement of occasional academic processions in cap, gown, and hood, and the sense of power induced by petty tyranny over immature minds. . . .

"There are no more stodgy defenders of the status quo than our university faculties. The word academic has come to have a derogatory connotation when applied to the arts, and the same connotation is appropriate to the academic intellectual life. Most of the professors in America are engaged in a tiresome elaboration of the obvious and fiercely resent any innovation of method or content."

"They had better be timid!" a teacher writes in Harper's, December, 1937, responding to the preceding, and citing cases of those not timid enough, "deserted by their professional compeers", thrown to the wolves, "families destitute". One "told his class there was a country called Russia", another advised his "students to read Hindus' 'Red Bread'".

The fear of hunger, the 'food incentive', is still the driving force of our civilization, as it was with our naked ancestors. For the timid there is no freedom, whether he is a professor or some other kind of animal.

"Academic freedom is a monkey-shine", writes undergraduate James Laughlin IV in the December, 1937, Harvard Advocate. "They don't give you the job until they've made sure you won't try to be free."

THE DEAD WEIGHT OF ALUMNI

The alumni are the product of the university, but they in turn influence the university and its policies. It is a vicious circle, as Hutchins has remarked.

THEY AREN'T SO DUMB

The alumni aren't so "dumb" as one might gather from Tunis' study of his own class of 1911. He concluded, "We are a bunch of contented college cows . . . whose chief ambitions . . . are to vote the Republican ticket, to keep out of the bread line, and to break 100 at golf" (cf. 21st ed., p. 173).

Skulls aren't so thick, or heads so hard as might appear. Even "the people" is not "a stupid beast" as Alexander Hamilton claimed. Today you smile if you quote it. Hooton is safely scientific when he talks or writes about "Apes, Men and Morons".

Yet one does not feel great elation at the alertness or awareness of his fellow alumni as manifested by the majority of letters in the Harvard Alumni Bulletin. The more intelligent snobbishly feel perhaps that any thought contribution on their part would be unappreciated by the average reader.

To manufacture the alumni, the raw material was carefully chosen from the superior, the elect. If there is anything wrong with them, it is the way they have been educated. If they had not gone to college, their training and their inhibitions would be different.

A HEAVY HERITAGE

President Conant, scientist, has been obliged to see a great deal of alumni at Harvard Clubs, football games, and believes something should be done for future Harvard alumni.

The university produces alumni, who fertilize the soil from which the university grows. They send their sons, they give their funds, and influence others to do likewise. "Look at a gathering of old Harvard grads, bald, jowled, dewlapped, stoop shouldered, pot-bellied. They are dulled, disillusioned. There is no sparkle, no fire. They are a tamed, dispirited lot, without zest for life." (Yankee, October, 1937). To this a faculty member retorts, "The B.A. didn't entitle them to drink perpetually of the fountain of youth. What do you think education is, a biological miracle?"

Under the inherited policy of making the college safe for 'Back Bay youth', President Conant recognizes that not all of the best material comes to Harvard. So he has established national scholarships with no examinations and all expenses paid. Jealous college presidents have attacked him for raiding other universities, taking the best material. He would raise the quality of student material and reduce the enrollment. He believes in an aristocracy of the intellect. And in this some of his critics see fascist tendencies.

FERTILIZING THE COLLEGE COURSE

The uninspired quality of the teaching, "dull and lifeless . . . unattractive and dry" is of course appreciated by the president. But little can be done about it, because of what is called 'academic freedom'. "Thanks to the rule giving permanent tenure to all of the status of associate professor and above, the overcrowded ranks of older professors can not be thinned." (Lamb, "Harvard Starves the Social Sciences").

So President Conant warns, "The first step in a liberal education can be acquired around the dinner table". He is endeavoring to make the four year undergraduate course not without value, by encouraging the establishment of non-credit, hobby courses to enable undergraduates to "continue their intellectual and spiritual growth after completing their formal studies". The credit courses must be maintained to give employment to the professors who have 'security of tenure'. The non-credit courses, it is hoped, may give students enduring intellectual interests.

THE PREP SCHOOLS' REVENGE

This is the prep schools' revenge. For generations the universities have dominated these preparatory schools, have imposed upon them an arid and sterile course. Liege Prep School, faithful to Lord University, has not dared to protest at the un-nutritious chaff on which he has been obliged to feed his pupils.

Some of the better preparatory schools in recent years have encouraged their students to develop hobbies. Groton, most faithful to the traditional curriculum, early introduced the printing plant, where composition, spelling, and punctuation became motor activities. The Hill has built a wonderful hobby building.

Even before that, in the great Public Schools of England, where the academic work is even more sterile, the better students have been encouraged to complete their preparatory work and continue with a year of specialization in some subject before entering the university.

Now some thirty of the better schools, instigated by the Progressives, have forced upon the leading universities their pupils educated as they think best, instead of being 'prepared' by the stultifying college prescription.

It is to be hoped that they will be informed and interested in the world about them, and have acquired habits of using their brains intensively.

WHY SO DUMB?

But why are the alumni "dumb"? The chosen of the land should be the yeast and ferment. Well, they were conditioned in the preparatory process, by "a combination of boredom and torture" (Kirtley Mather). "Teach him to think for himself? Goodness no! Teach him to think like other people." In college they were further conditioned, stupefied and stultified.

One of the damaging effects of college on the ordinary undergraduate is the dampening of his originality, the suppression of his personality. James Laughlin IV, in The Harvard Advocate, December, 1937, speaks of "the observable tendency of the college's life to blight young thinking: individual thinking, original thinking. . . . Something ties them, or makes them tie themselves, in knots. . . . They give in, completing in a year the curve that should take thirty. In their minds, in their thoughts, they become middle-aged overnight."

More damaging is the permanent feeling of inferiority. A reverence for the dead hand, what are awesomely spoken of as traditions, lies heavily on the college man. Still worse is the awe which the average undergraduate regards the letter men, the club men, the wire pulling, politically minded leaders. And this attitude persists among the alumni.

Some graduate with the flame of youth still burning. But the prizes are so tempting, and nonconformity calls for so much abnegation, that they soon learn to play the game and take the prize. As tools and servants of finance capitalism, they advance rapidly, achieve worldly success, and are reverently looked up to by their classmates who have not taken the brass check, and feel an individual inferiority.

MEN OF GOOD WILL

Men who do things, who give time and money, service and loyalty to the university, come in for criticism from the do-nothing radicals and critics and cynics who stand on the sidelines. Among the most prominent and influential alumni, loyally present at commencements, always ready with a few hundred thousand for some genuine need, are such men as Jack Morgan, '89, LL.D. (Hon.) '23, not over-endowed son of a great father, and Tom Lamont, '92, LL.D. (Hon.) '31, "probably the single most influential individual in contemporary American journalism". His "duties as a Morgan partner and apostolic successor to George W. Perkins are varied, but among them journalistic concerns have played a very large part. . . . Usually when the New York newspapers, in editorial or news columns chastely allude to 'prominent banking opinion', 'impressions in financial circles', and 'the consensus among bankers', they refer only to Lamont." Walter Lippmann, '09, chairman of the Visiting Committee of the Department of Economics, consultant on the use of the Nieman fund "to promote and elevate the standards of journalism in the United States", is "among the many Lamont literary and journalistic friends. . . . Lamont's most important editorial outlet". (Lundberg, pp. 312-319). Twenty years ago Lippmann, an outspoken socialist, was too radical to be admitted to the Harvard Liberal Club.

Lamont has come up from a newspaper reporter. His brother, Hammond, was once an instructor in English at Harvard. One son is a radical and communist, the other is following in his father's footsteps. Lamont is a public-spirited, conscientious and useful citizen, and certainly a loyal son of Harvard.

The control of higher education in America lies increasingly with the financially successful. Lawyers and bankers on boards of trustees of fifteen great private universities increased between 1860 and 1930 from 48% to 74%. This is the trend as revealed by the Rockefeller-financed investigation in The Educational Record.

AFFECTED BY ENVIRONMENT

Head of the self-perpetuating but constantly changing Corporation, the President of Harvard is responsible to the Overseers, but must hold the support of the alumni. The Corporation today is made up chiefly of men, in their youth of liberal tendencies, now restricted or inhibited by financial dependence upon alumni who serve and represent great corporations. To the Overseers are constantly elected liberals, who in their environment soon conform to pattern, losing the qualities that gave them individuality. And so they begin to look like conservatives. Rarely do they become reactionaries who see good only in the past.

"These men are products of an environment with which they are so successfully and intelligently integrated that it would take more than your or my suggestions by letter to have any effect on their decisions or actions", writes an alumnus and former college president, who knows the ways of his fellows.

Men of good will, they are playing the game according to the rules as they know them. They begin to feel a loss of curiosity, even a growing unwillingness to delight as does a scientist in facing new questions. Their joy no longer lies in discovering the whys and wherefores of what is generally accepted. They are turning their backs on reality.

FREE AND FEARLESS

Snubbing and snobbing are the most powerful means of holding men in control. England knows how to put it over on 'inferior' peoples, to maintain its caste system. On the other hand, English diplomats always put it over on their American colleagues,—take 'em right into camp.

NOT ALL ARE TAMED

Rare are the alumni who remain free and fearless in their thinking. And these few are unknown to each other, unorganized. Few are bold enough in their thought to have anything to say, and of these, few independent enough to dare say it. Only occasionally is a lone, clear voice heard above the tumult of rah rahs. Though the more tolerant may listen, the more cynical smile. But in perspective they stand up as giants among the little men.

Thoreau shook the dust of Cambridge from his feet, never to return. Emerson, its severest critic, for more than twenty years ostracized, avoided the college yard, though from Somerville and from the Theological Seminary he denounced the stultifying influences of his alma mater. Wendell Phillips was an outcast in his day. The mediocrities are much more comfortable to have around than the Socrates.

A FEARLESS ALUMNUS

Another free man cast in heroic mould, with a face like Michael Angelo, and an impetuosity and fieriness of temperament akin, was magnanimously tolerated because of recognized charm of personality. He was in the Boston tradition of the greater Adamses, of whom the last was Brooks, of Wendell Phillips, and Garrison. Such men grow, like William McAndrew, "the older, the bolder".

In John Jay Chapman and His Letters, Houghton Mifflin, 1937, Mark Antony DeWolfe Howe presents, a little apologetically to his fellow Taverners and Boston alumni, this wildly free friend of his. And still he understands him, for his son Quincy Howe is like Chapman in his outspoken freedom, his refusal to remain dumb in the presence of hypocrisy. Too bad Chapman could not have lived in Boston rather than dissipating his influence in New York.

Holding himself in restraint, Mr. Howe tones down or omits significant episodes. He fails to tell us how Chapman, in protest at the commercialization of football, with gusto and satire proposed to an alumni meeting a contract with a bill posting concern, and so supply all the money they needed. Many of the colleges seem to have adopted the suggestion, but Chapman killed it for Harvard.

Mr. Howe tells us, "It was not until Chapman became openly critical of Harvard that his alma mater began to recognize his existence. In a private letter he once tossed off the term 'alumniotism', to define an obnoxious sentiment." And Chapman is quoted, "It is with a kind of joy that I attack Harvard College knowing that Harvard supplies the light and liberalism—hardly elsewhere to be seen in America—by which I am permitted to proceed. I should grieve to have this freedom extinguished, as it would be if the alumni were forbidden to take a critical interest in the institution."

As Fuess brings out in The Yale Review, Winter, 1938, "A proud spirit, who could not and would not be moulded into the conventional form, who was the inveterate hater of meanness and sham and dishonesty, of little men and women . . . the two major targets for his satire were Harvard College, of which he was a graduate in the class of 1884, and the Roman Catholic Church. . . ."

"FREE SPEECH AND PLAIN LANGUAGE"

'Academic freedom' the university stands for, but no Free Speech and Plain Language, Morrow, 1937, such as Albert Jay Nock advocates. There is no niche in a university for such a seminal mind. So he remains a free man. Formerly editor of The Freeman, in these reprinted essays which have appeared in Harper's and Atlantic in the past seven years, Nock hits hard with great suavity. Contempt and revilement are placidly poured upon those who would attempt to control him, by government, law, or tabu, (cf. 20th ed., pp. 39, 102-3).

"THE DISADVANTAGES OF BEING EDUCATED"

One of his best essays bears the above title. In England we all admire the ivy mantled ruins of the monastic establishments Henry VIII suppressed. H. G. Wells has held forth on the possibilities this method offers for our modern universities. Nock tells of a distinguished American artist who "when his ship came in . . . proposed to give magnificent endowments to Columbia, Harvard, Princeton and Yale on the sole condition that they should shut up shop and go out of business forever". This stimulated Nock to rush "into print with the suggestions that in addition to our present system of schools, colleges and universities which are doing first-class work as training-schools, we ought to have a few educational institutions". This is exactly in line with President Conant's idea for hobby courses.

ACADEMIC RITUAL

Ecclesiastical and monastic paraphernalia that Oxford and Cambridge have inherited, American universities are obliged to manufacture to meet demand, like Yale's 'ancient' mace and the Pierre La Rose Tercentenary banners. The academic hood and gown derived from the cloistered monk, but the scheme of colored facings for the fifty-seven varieties of degree is a modern device.

PANES ET CIRCENSES

Commencement parades, pageantry, platitudes, and 'spreads' still work with young and old. Sentimentalism still permeates our education. We revere useless loyalties. "Goodbye Mr. Chips" is a best seller. As the classes formed on the shadowed lawn under the elms, the old, halt and bowed leading, my heart used to come right up into my throat, my glands speeded up, my capillaries diffused. I could hardly keep back the tears.

"Dear Old Wabash! How American youth have fought and bled for her in a thousand colleges. About them is a shifting world, a changing civilization, men from the slums sacrificing and dying for their enthusiasms. But the deepest emotion that has thrilled these poor young rich Americans has been the appeal of their cheer leaders at the annual game." ("The New Immoralities", p. 63).

The sports writer in the Boston Herald who wrote the following understood the importance of football over other undergraduate interests. "But Foley likes to study, and as a sophomore last fall he took his studies more to heart than he did his football. He also was bothered by a hip injury. The result was that he spent last summer on the junior varsity. But Coach Dick Harlow never lost faith in Foley. During the season he often said, 'Frank Foley is a good football player, one of the better backs on our squad. One of these afternoons he will bring a grand victory to Harvard.' During last spring practice he [Foley] experienced a change of heart. Football became his major interest."

THE MAGIC OF THE DEGREE

Anthropologists, in the study of magic and secret societies among primitive tribes and other peoples, find just as strange business as the college degree, earned 'in course' or 'honoris causa'.

That the magic of the degree is potent is evident from the increasing number of brands, more numerous than cattle brands in the West. Few need remain mavericks except for lack of money. To earn two thousand dollars a year teaching today, one should have a degree in education, master or doctor. A generation ago there were no doctors degrees in education. From 1918 to 1932 the annual number awarded increased from 53 to 337, and during that period the number totalled 2,302. If human stupidity must increase at that rate, it is well to have it branded. The brand certifies that they know how to teach, but doesn't certify that they have anything to teach.

"One thousand degree granting colleges and universities provide a democratic U. S. equivalent of the British Honors List", proving Stanley Baldwin's remark, "The more democratic a country is, the larger its Honors List".

"The Strange Business of the Honorary Degree" is dilated on by John Tunis in "Honoris Causa", Harper's, June, 1937. He points out some interesting bizarre facts. "Honorary degrees are awarded with a canny eye for prestige, publicity, and good hard cash. . . . College trustees measure men by reputation rather than by real achievement. . . . Harvard's record in twenty years between 1911 and 1931 shows that it recognized poetry only in the persons of John Masefield and Robert Bridges, both Poet Laureates of England." The shaman in charge of Harvard's magic, "head of the committee on honorary degrees", is Dr. Roger I. Lee, a Boston physician, and member of the Corporation.

Some big chiefs are more branded than strayed or stolen cattle. Some like it. There are professional collectors, Hoover (27), Lowell (28), Finley (30). Butler now has to go to South and Central America to get additional degrees.

"THE CHARLATANRY OF THE LEARNED"

Most colleges find honorary degrees "handy to pat one another approvingly on the back. President A grants an LL.D. to President B, and the next June President B awards a Litt.D. to President A." (John R. Tunis).

"Of all these dodges the most diverting, as Erasmus says, is that practised by scholars who indulge in mutual laudations, returning admiration for admiration, in letters, verses, and eulogies." This is from The Charlatany of the Learned, Knopf, 1937, first published in Leipzig in 1715, by Johann Burkhard Mencken. The new edition has notes and introduction by a collateral descendant, H. L. Mencken. This, like Erasmus' "In Praise of Folly", 1509, two centuries before, was the best seller of the time, going through many editions in many languages.

AN INTEGRAL PART OF OUR CULTURE

Any element of a culture changes with time and place. But change may come slowly in an isolated, unchanging environment. The commencement exercises or puberty rites of the Aruntas of Central Australia have probably remained fixed these hundred thousand years.

But in New England, immigrations of peoples and ideas have brought changes. The ways of conscientious parent or pedagogue with children, of Harvard president with God or undergraduate, are not the same today as they were in 1920, 1820, 1720. Once parent, pedagogue, and college president spent much of their time birching the young or bootlicking God. Those worthies of former days would not approve what they would find today. Customs change. There are academic fashions among the faculty, even among the undergraduates. Psychological attitudes are even more evanescent than sweaters and slacks.

THE DEAD LEVEL OF CUSTOM

Our great universities are reservoirs where accumulations of the past, bookish and traditional, collect. They have their high and low levels. Like the conserving reservoir, and most conservative bodies, a university may act as a retarding and steady influence in times of change, or may discharge a stimulus upon a still and stagnant society.

From the dead level of custom, under the impetus or pressure of some great force, a university may rise above its source. At the Tercentenary, President Conant, a scientist dragged from his researches, on the verge of great chlorophyl discoveries, gave such a stimulus. Though the jet of inspiration and enthusiasm could not be permanently maintained, he stirred a stagnant academic world, opened new vistas, prescribed new methods, and laid down new objectives.

With the naivete and boldness of a scientist, Conant announced a common sense program of examining with the detachment of a geologist into the stratification of our social system. Some evidently thought he went too far, that sacred cows were jostled. He found himself in a difficult and delicate position. In the months following, his words and acts showed the steadying and stabilizing influence of more conservative forces. And eventually there was subsidence to the dead level of mass alumni opinion.

UNIVERSITY MORES

The great American goddess, Alma Mater, is worshipped from Orono to Pomona, with traditional ceremonies and seasonal spectacles to do her honor. The ritual is as absorbing to the votaries and as absurd to the unprejudiced onlooker as would be that of the Paphian Venus, the Ephesian Diana, the sinister Magna Mater.

What a native Liberian distinguished as the essential elements in the culture of such institutions as Harvard University and a typical church preparatory school, were made clear in the letter he wrote back to his black bishop in charge of education.

"Now in Liberia The A. M. E. Church has a College, the Methodists have a college . . . The Episcopal Church . . . should start the first university of Liberia . . . modeled after Harvard University . . . Teach most everything . . . have the men's Glee Club . . . let them dress collegiate with polo shirts and different college clothes. Have the boys cheer for the different games . . . have a large concrete swimming pool . . . Teach acting and dramatics . . . allow the Collegiates to have their automobiles . . . Teach them how to run business . . . teach playing jazz music. Have a beautiful modernistic chapel . . . Teach the students to be up to date . . . wearing caps and gowns . . . beautiful colorful uniforms . . . sweaters have words saying U. L. . . . take pictures of the teachers in caps and gowns . . . Send them to the New York Times . . . teach journalism . . . how to run business such as theatres, department stores . . . have college bands." He outlined, too, a plan for the feeder to the university, "the Episcopal school for boys . . . modern concrete . . . square shaped buildings . . . teach all the boys to wear shoes, white duck pants . . . train athletes".

WHY THEY BEHAVE AS THEY DO

The alumni of the universities and colleges are the selected seed of the nation. They control our universities, which control our schools, which control the pabulum or poison on which the best of our young are fed. They are the vital link in Hutchins' 'vicious circle'. Why they think as they do, what determines their beliefs, what affects their attitudes, what makes them behave as they do, is deserving of study. Moulded by their schoolmasters, cramped by material considerations, they have little impulse to freedom of thought or speech. Had they the heroic attitude they might free their universities from the pall of fear that overhangs. Alma Mater might then become an actual center of light and the desire to learn, to question, to investigate, rather than a center of dead learning.

The faculties still retain some taint of ecclesiastical and monkish antecedents. Cloistered, timorous, contemptuous of the world about them, they inevitably tend to become a self-protective priestcraft. Collectively and individually they generally show as little confidence about balancing their intellectual as their personal budgets.

The undergraduates are supposed to listen with bated breath to talk of 'eternal verities', to acquire a veneration for some ghostlike impossible vision, 'The Truth', refusing to see the little bits of it that lie all about them. The London journal Truth, run by a faker and swindler who finally died in prison, used to carry on its cover a sexy, statuesque odalisque, hips ajar, torch aloft — perhaps the undergraduate conception of 'Truth'. It is in the universities, where there is this perpetual steeplechase in pursuit of 'Truth', that tabus and folklore curdle thick.

Universities pride themselves on their traditions and ritual, blind to the fact that all is recent resuscitation of the primitive. Repetitive ritual, custom, and tradition are nowhere so fixed, unchanged for perhaps a hundred thousand years, as among the most primitive aborigines of Australia, where violators of folkways are hunted down and slain. Sir Baldwin Spencer, the Australian anthropologist, who spent a lifetime studying their customs, describes in detail the elaborate corroborees attendant to the initiation of youth into adulthood. These "practices transmitted by the oldest members of the tribe transcend in intricacy the traditions of our eldest western educational institutions and the numerous prolonged conferences and meetings of the old men in preparation for each morrow's ceremony make the faculty meetings of our oldest universities planning a commencement exercise seem trivial", (cf. 13th ed., p. 35).

WHO MAY BE FREE?

In such an atmosphere, where tradition and ritual are worshipped, few may transcend the mores of the tribe, the ethics or the priestcraft.

But let the college professor have something to say and speak it boldly, and he is in demand, he has a following. He is wanted as a speaker, his books sell, he has income, he is independent. He can thumb his nose at the university. The millionaire and the college president will lick his boots, because he has what they are both after, popular support. And if he has that rarest of all things in academic circles, a sense of humor, he can insult and browbeat his audience, he can talk to dentists, doctors, engineers, and tell them where they have fallen down, he can insult the Harvard Clubs in St. Louis or Kansas City, and they cheer him, love it and call for more. Just because he doesn't give a hoot, they recognize him as worth listening to. His feet are squarely under him, his head in the air, his tail up.

Nothing can touch him except his colleagues, the greatest suppressing and repressing force of all. Their attitude of 'It isn't done', 'It isn't cricket', is sometimes crushing.

If ever there was a man who was independent of such snobbery and caste loyalty, independent because of worldwide prestige, because money flowed in from his books, it was William James. Yet so strong is the brotherhood in the teaching priest-craft that when he wrote John Jay Chapman criticizing two of his colleagues, he asked that the letter be burned. It takes a good man to stand up in a university, even at Harvard.

AN ANTHROPOLOGICAL SURVEY

In the past generation a new scientific method of examining peoples and their institutions has developed. From the curios of the missionaries and the whalers, from the collections of Indian arrowheads and skulls brought together in museums, patient workers have created a science of man. A Malinowski or a Margaret Mead, living the life of isolated islanders, speaking their language and thinking their thoughts, studying their mores and folklore, have given us a method whereby we may study and come to understand the behavior of those immediately about us.

Why should the anthropologists and psychologists and psychiatrists today spend their talent on recognized criminals, the hopelessly insane, or island isolated primitives? A study of our all highest, our university presidents and their faculties, their behavior, mores, folklore, myths, would yield richer results than the study of the population of our penitentiaries. Such a survey would be of more immediate value to the world than any the scientists are likely to undertake. It is an absurdity that we should do for the criminal and the insane, the poorest and the least hopeful, what we deny our best.

This may be a bold suggestion. But with tact it might be successfully undertaken. There would be a lot of sputtering and spilling, and a gloom of pessimism as to the results of such a study, a pessimism perhaps not wholly justified. To have faith that some good would come of this, one need not believe too fully in the possibility of the redemption of the educated, or that the philosophical could be turned to contemplation of reality, or that men of 'principles' would discard them.

THE PROPER STUDY

President Raymond B. Fosdick of the Rockefeller Foundation in "A Review for 1936" announced a new plan "to sharpen its program. 'The proper study of mankind is man'. For the time being at least, this dictum governs the policy of the Trustees." The Foundation is to promote research in mental hygiene, endocrinology, "the problem of human behavior".

Nowhere could the Foundation find a more worthy field for study than in our universities. They are deserving of some scientific consideration. The cloistered scene would be found cluttered with dead beliefs, antiquities of human cerebration,—young and old engaged in archaic ritual, intense professors chasing their metaphysical tails, ambitious youth following prescribed gymnastics to strengthen flabby mental muscles. They would find a priestcraft "destined to end, as does all priestcraft, in superstition", as Lancelot Hogben writes in "Mathematics for the Million". "History shows that superstitions are not manufactured by the plain man. They are invented by neurotic intellectuals with too little to do."

RIDE 'EM, COWBOY

The Rockefeller researchers will find that pioneering scouts have preceded. Out of the West have come two young Lochinvars, hard riding bunkum busters. There is something in the clear atmosphere of the high altitudes of Wyoming, something about the inspiration of the mountains, that stimulates a free and bold attitude.

Here is the former mayor of Laramie, a Yale law professor, now the Administration's trust buster, Thurman Arnold. The beliefs and behavior of professors, corporation lawyers, business men, overlooked by the scientist, seem to him worthy of study and analysis. He has written about the "Symbols" they play with, the tabus that fetter them, the "Folklore" that unconsciously controls them. He finds that for them "The word 'education' was simply a substitution for preaching in a more mystical age".

Another Wyoming cowboy, dude rancher, reformed Philadelphia socialite, aristocrat, traveler, novelist, author of "The Delectable Mountains", has made an anthropological study of the Eastern university alumnus. Struthers Burt spent a summer a few years ago innocently and naively along the New England coast, and came off bravely. There he discovered a race of aristocratic supermen, bronzed Vikings, living on their yachts or in seaside villas. Their ancestors developed the China trade, built the Western railroads. They are the select and elect of the nation, the product and patrons of our private schools, the leading alumni of our great universities.

He found them "a race that at any time, if it will exhibit the brains and courage and patience that should be there, can assume, or rather regain, its leadership, lost for over a century, provided that leadership is honest, unselfish, and not in direct opposition to all intelligent modern thought". But today, trained on meaningless words, unable to face reality, they are without "the basic aristocratic ideal of noblesse oblige", without "a solitary plan that has for its basis patriotism or vision" (Scribner's, March, 1936).

IT'S UP TO THE UNIVERSITIES

The world about us is evidence enough that the universities have fallen down on their job. The implicit and unbounded faith of American parents in education dominated by the universities has been misplaced. They have failed us before,—at the outbreak of the war. They failed us after the war, and in a more recent crisis. "There were the universities, great schools, galaxies of authorities, learned men, experts, teachers gowned, adorned, and splendid", writes H. G. Wells in Harper's, April, 1937. "This higher brain, this cerebrum, this gray matter of America was so entirely unco-ordinated that it had nothing really comprehensive, searching, thought-out, and trustworthy to go upon."

There is no reason why our universities should continue to fail us. And they won't, if there is drive and demand on the part of their alumni that they turn about and face reality. At the Harvard Tercentenary President Conant got us all 'het up' over the possibilities,—about what universities might do. Since, however, the heat has died down, and the light has flickered fitfully. The hope that education may 'save the world', expressed by Head Master Fuess at the Andover commencement, is not at present justified. At least, our tour of the universities fails to show that they have much to offer.

At the Harvard commencement, Walter Cannon demanded that the universities help us to learn why man behaves as he does. Now the Rockefeller Foundation takes for its program Pope's old text "the proper study of mankind". Let the universities examine their own folklore and tabus, get away from principles, philosophies, 'eternal verities', stop chasing that old harridan 'Truth'. It's time to be scientific and anthropological.

BANKERS, PUBLISHERS, BUSINESS

The progress of the century has been in material things, in the creation of wealth. 'Industry' and 'finance' which came out of mercantilism have led. The bankers, manufacturers, the newspaper publishers, all have their national associations, annual conventions and loud speakers. Perhaps they will show us how to "save the world".

THE COME BACK OF THE BANKS

The American Bankers Association, President Tom K. Smith reported at its meeting in Boston, October, 1937, "today represents 13,009 banks . . . 72.98 per cent of all the banks in the country", a good comeback in six years since all the banks were closed after most had failed.

Banks encourage thrift. The peoples' savings are the basis of their business. Frank P. Bennett, Jr., editor of The United States Investor told the meeting, "Government is a clumsy, blundering body . . . making a frontal attack with the postal savings banks and the Federal savings and loan associations, which represent a direct bid for funds that otherwise would go to banks . . . It has deliberately created Federal savings and loan associations in New England and New York and other places where existing agencies for saving and for mortgage lending are adequate or more than adequate. The encroachment of the Federal Housing Administration in the savings field is a flank attack . . . It would deprive banks of their best earning assets."

President Smith told the meeting how the comeback had been fostered by the Association's advertising department by close contact "between the association and the press. This department supplies many special articles and material on banking for newspapers, encyclopedias, year books and writers in national magazines, all with the purpose of making a better presentation of banking to the public."

The bankers' interest as in the past seems to be on getting people's savings into their hands, using newspaper propaganda and resenting interference. The names of Wiggin, Mitchell, Harriman are tabu, as will be that of Richard Whitney, once the idol of the exchange and a member of the Visiting Committee on the Department of Economics at Harvard. But bank presidents' secret profits are still reported, Time, December 13. It is doubtful if bankers now show more vision than in 1929.

PUBLISHERS' FREEDOM

The American Newspaper Publishers Association, with 1800

members, at its annual convention in Chicago, June, 1937, rallied to the slogan of "freedom of the press". Newly elected President Stahlman, of the Nashville Banner, answering the challenge of the American Newspaper Guild, which had met at St. Louis two weeks earlier, declared the closed shop "is a most serious threat to a free press, and consequently to the liberties of a free people."

"Freedom of the press includes the right to express even distorted opinions", the Washington Post asserts, referring to an article attacking the National Labor Relations Board's investigation of life in Weir's steel company town in Mill and Factory, October, 1937, published at the expense of the company, one infers, for Ayer's Newspaper Directory lists it as a trade organ having no paid circulation.

Freedom of the press must not be restricted by child labor laws limiting age or hours of news boys on the streets at night. How a contract with a newspaper boy may be drawn so that he works "at his own risk and expense" and is not subject to compensation liability if run over, is fully explained in a publication for the benefit of newspaper circulation managers, under the aegis of The Newspaper Boys of America, Inc., Indianapolis, 1937. The title is The Newspaper Boy — Merchant or Employee? by Charles A. Rohleder, 120 pages, $5.00.

How the "newsie" has been transformed by publishers, lawyers, into an "independent contractor", bearing full risk of collections and in many states excluded from the benefits of child labor and workmen's compensation laws, is told by Alfred McClung Lee in The Daily Newspaper in America: The Evolution of a Social Instrument, Macmillan, 1937.

"A newspaper is a private enterprise, owing nothing whatever to the public, which grants it no franchise. It is therefore 'affected' with no public interest. It is emphatically the property of the owner, who is selling a manufactured product at his own risk. . . . Editors, except where they own their own newspapers, take their policy from their employers. . . . But for ridiculously obvious reasons, there are many newspaper owners willing enough to encourage the public in the delusion that it is the editor of a newspaper who dictates the selection of news and the expression of opinion." The preceding, from The Wall Street Journal in January 25, 1925, is equally true now.

DISTORTING THE NEWS

"Comparatively few papers give significant accounts of our basic economic conflicts", 86.6% of Washington correspondents report. "The publishers' cry of 'freedom of the press' in fighting the NRA code was a ruse", 63.8% assert. These figures are from a study of the leaders of the journalistic profession, who are more independent than most, The Washington Correspondents, by Leo C. Rosten, Harcourt Brace, 1937.

In The Press and World Affairs, Appleton-Century, 1937, Robert W. Desmond, long time foreign correspondent, tells us, "Almost all that any person knows about public affairs is gleaned from newspapers. It is equally certain that what any person knows, or thinks he knows, determines how he behaves. His opinion and his behavior, multiplied by the opinions and behaviors of all those of his fellow-men, who are similarly influenced, determines the history of the world."

In the introduction Harold Laski writes, "Behind the correspondents is an immense machinery whose purpose is deliberate distortion. . . . It is clear enough that the simple hopes of a 'free' press as a source of right opinions, hopes with which Jeremy Bentham and his disciples started, are unlikely to be fulfilled in any period of time we can foresee."

MAKING PUBLIC OPINION

"Rich men and politicians have a fixed belief that if they can control the press they will be able to control public opinion", Aldous Huxley writes in "Notes on Propaganda", Harper's, December, 1936.

The effectiveness of propaganda among school children has been investigated by experiments and tests by Professor Herman H. Remmers of Purdue University, reported in Princeton University's Public Opinion Quarterly, Spring, 1938. The effect is equal on children of high or low I. Q. In two months some of the effect wears off, but much lasts six months. The implications for our democratic society Professor Remmers considers most serious.

The dishonest distortion of the news on Russia printed in the New York Times was investigated and reported on in The New Republic fifteen years ago. That resulted in a change of policy and the appointment of Walter Duranty to represent the Times in Russia. Walter Lippman, the author, was then a deluded socialist. Since then he has won the ear of 'business' and 'industry', become wealthy and divorced, and the medium loud speaker of Thomas Lamont. He has been honored by Harvard by election as an overseer and appointment to many visiting committees. More recently with Ellery Sedgwick and John Stewart Bryan, publishers, he has been appointed to make the awards to newspaper men, recommended by their publishers. This Nieman bequest of one million "to promote and elevate the standards of journalism" will probably not be used for any such radical plan as Walter Lippman's earlier investigation. The freedom of the press, "the hired man of industry" must be maintained.

THE ABUSED BUSINESS MAN

The business man, descendant of the trader, has always hoed a hard row. Taxed by governments, bled by the bankers, absorbed or destroyed by corporations, he risks his savings on opportunities or distributive projects he discovers, for profit or loss. The business man nearly always pays, Harry Scherman tells us in "The Promises Men Live By". Corporation paper and government paper is not always redeemed. The individual is honest, the combination may not be. The weak pay because the powerful can force them to. Once we could say, 'The woman always pays'.

A History of the Business man, Macmillan, 1938, by Miriam Beard, daughter of the historians, Charles and Mary, and wife of Dr. Alfred Vagts, author of the monumental "History of Militarism", Norton, 1937, traces for the first time the devious way of the traders from the New Stone Age to the New Deal. An enormous amount of interesting information is brought together.

Prehistoric merchants brought the Baltic amber to the Aegean. In Brittany four thousand years ago a 'merchant of death' cached "four thousand standardized stone hatchets", recently dug up. The trader, our modern business man, is followed from Carthage to Chicago, the munitions men from Crassus to Krupp, business failures from John Law to the Van Sweringens. The Hanseatic League, the methods of the Fuggers, are familiarly compared with those of the Morgans and the Rockefellers.

Trade led to financing, dealing in promises and bills of exchange. The finance capitalist today, the dealer in promises, stocks, bonds, bits of paper, the juggler in values, hiding behind the 'business man', serving the 'widows and orphans', determines the destinies of the millions. His will is made known through the 'voice of business'.

What boobs business men are Roger Babson appreciates. "Not even well versed in the fundamentals of business cycles . . . We are a nation of economic illiterates." The business man is the most abused and deluded and defrauded element in our economy.

'INDUSTRY'

Depicted in cartoons, as a workman in a square cap, 'Industry' is a newspaper euphemism for 'Big Business'. 'Management', the most important function in our social economy, is represented by long lists of vice presidents with salaries up to $300,000. They manage not only production, but labor espionage, public propaganda through newspapers, films, radio, and distribution through advertising and pressure sales. Their industrial plants and their puppets are pawns for shrewder men who sell 'securities'. The buyers hope for gain but are periodically 'shaken out'. The mythology and folklore about 'Industry' consist of a mass of principles, 'fundamentals', and 'eternal verities', pronounced by economists, which all 'thinking men' devoutly believe.

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF MANUFACTURERS

"Press agent for 'Industry'," Time calls it; "a perfect example of Bourbonism in full flower", The New Republic. Dominated by 207 corporations, whose officers in 1936 drew salaries of $89,750,000 (The Nation, March 12, 1938), who bought 60% of all the tear gas sold in this country, 55 of these companies paid two and a quarter millions for spy service from 1933 to 1937. It has 4000 members, many of them deluded little business men, about to be defrauded by their big competitors. The New York meeting of the N. A. M., December, 1937, was a continuation of the program started when Hutton suggested that they "gang up" against the administration.

Time in its issue of December 13, under "Business and Finance" printed a five-page story made up from the altruistic 'handouts' on the 'American way'. News-Week cagily acknowledged receipt of propaganda and announced they would report after the event. The following week Time reported the meeting under "Industry" with the title—"Worst Foot".

W. B. Warner, head of the McCall Corporation, admitted, "Some will say that industry is selfish . . . that it seeks its own preservation. It does. But its preservation is essential to the happiness . . . of 130,000,000 people." He regretted that, "In the last 29 years the amount expended on so-called non essentials, amusement, recreation . . . has increased 200 per cent while the population was increasing only 43 per cent . . . In 1929 labor's share of the national income was 54.5 per cent; in 1936 labor's share had risen to 66.5 per cent." But he failed to tell us that "In the single year of 1936 the big corporations of the United States had increased their profits six times as much as the workers have managed to increase their wages during the entire four years of the New Deal”.

N. A.M. PROPAGANDA

“Business Finds Its Voice”, three articles by S. H. Walker and Paul Sklar, in Harper's, January, February, and March, 1938, tells of the tremendous propaganda machine that has been built up by the N. A. M., with an annual budget of $5,000,000,—press service to 5000 small town newspapers, cartoons and editorial features to 300 dailies.

How the great corporations are reaching millions of people by film and radio is detailed in full. They quote Paul Garrett, public relations director of General Motors, as telling his executives, “Since 1929 nearly 17,000,000 young people have come of age . . . If you are interested in the part youth is playing in the modern world, study the records of the dictators of Europe . . . Every day more than 28,000,000 ‘General Motors people’ are casting a vote for or against us . . . employees, stockholders, dealers, suppliers, product owners, together with their families.” Garrett’s problem is how to control their votes.

The great advertising agencies have been enlisted to “educate the public”. “Management has been releasing a stream of printed and broadcast advertising, publicity, and commercial motion pictures for four years”. In the new program, booklets will be sent out “at the rate of 1,000,000 every two weeks; and representatives of Nation's Business will conduct 500,000 interviews with business men to urge on them ‘the necessity for promoting sound thinking about business among their customers, employees, and associates’”.

WHAT AMERICA HAS DONE FOR ‘INDUSTRY’

The story of ‘Industry’ is quickly told. In 1929 ‘Industry’ had received in exchange for pieces of paper, bonds, stocks, and notes, nearly $200,000,000,000. Three years later $15,500,000,000 would have bought all the ‘securities’ listed on the New York Stock Exchange. Since then the people through their Federal Government have borrowed on their credit and spent $20,000,000,000 largely to keep alive those whom ‘Industry’ could not employ, and to conserve and repair damage to our land. This money increased purchasing power, primed the pump, stimulated ‘Industry’ and agriculture.

April 6, 1938, while the hullabaloo about the Reorganization Bill concealed the action, Congress authorized the RFC to extend another billion and a half to business. Two-and-a-half billions previously loaned by the RFC had been cancelled by legislative act less than two months before.

FINANCIAL FOLLIES, 1937

This talk about 'capitalism' is foolish. Most of us are capitalists and our ancestors have been since they first possessed two stone axes. Capital is something accumulated to make use of at some future time. It is the hangover from past effort that enables one to get something more easily than if he started from scratch. How can anyone oppose capitalism? The grasshopper has no capital, but the lyre bird has, though it isn't worth much.

FOLKLORE OF FINANCE

Our own folklore becomes a dead thing as soon as we are conscious of it. The folklore of the American people, the beliefs and practices that they devoutly hold have more to do with corporations, industry, and banks than with churches or even schools. It is of this and the practices of their high priests that Thurman Arnold tells us in his The Folklore of Capitalism, Yale University Press, 1937.

The title is a little unfortunate. It may even suggest the red flag to some. The book deals with the folklore of the people about us, business man, banker, lawyer, thief.

"The folklore of 1937", he says, "was expressed principally by the literature of law and economics . . . Of course this literature was not called folklore. No one thought of sound principles of law or economics as a religion. They were considered as inescapable truths, as natural laws, as principles of justice, and as the only method of an ordered society. This is a characteristic of all vital folklore or religion."

THE AMERICAN HERO

"Let me designate the heroes of a nation and I care not who writes its constitution. In the days of chivalry national heroes were princes of the Church or warriors seeking high adventure for a holy motive . . . In the United States the mythology used to be very simple. The predominant figure was the American Businessman . . . The creed of the American Businessman was celebrated in our institutions of learning. Since the American Scholar was a minor divinity, some of his characteristics had to be assumed by the great industrial organization. Therefore colleges were endowed. . .

"The American Businessman was independent of his fellows. No individual could rule him. Hence the 'rule of law above men' was symbolized by the Constitution. This meant that the American Businessman was an individual who was free from the control of any other individual and owed allegiance only to the Constitution. However . . . his employees were subject to the arbitrary control of this divinity."

ARNOLD AS ANTHROPOLOGIST

"One might think that anthropology might be a descriptive term for a study of modern religion and political forms. It will not serve, however, because the anthropologist stops at the solemn threshold of law and economics, convinced of his unworthiness to proceed. He says in excuse, 'I am no economist or lawyer.' The Supreme Court of the United States has for years offered a more fascinating study in primitive ritualism than anything that the Malaysian tribes had to offer. The American Law Institute, composed of a group of men sitting around and doing responsive readings of the law, financed by the Carnegie Foundation, has never been adequately described."

Like a Malinowski among the Trobriand Islanders, but with a keener sense of humor, he deals in a way that will delight the irreverent in the presence of the phony, with the Messianic mutterings of the prophets of 'right thinking' people,—Walter Lippmann, Herbert Hoover, Alfred Sloan, Dorothy Thompson.

MYTHOLOGY OF THE CORPORATION

The inevitable and useful corporation has gathered folklore thick about it. The mythical corporation has assumed all the rights and privileges of the 'rugged individual'. Ceremonies are administered by a priesthood of lawyers attended by retinues of economists and engineers and clerks.

"The Ritual of Corporate Reorganization consists in the endless repetition in different forms of the notion that men must pay their debts, in a situation in which neither men nor debts in any real sense are involved.

"As the symbolism got farther and farther from reality, it required more and more ceremony to keep it up. The business corporation built more elaborate cathedrals, and endowed greater colleges to keep its theology moving along the right lines. This, of course, was an unconscious process, just as the great era of cathedral buildings in the thirteenth century was unplanned."

MAKING FACES

Where this folklore is most alive and potent, Arnold's book has been received with perplexity, condemnation, or contempt. Raymond Moley, who stubbed his toe at the London Economic Conference and lost his job with Hull and Roosevelt, and now serves the estranged former yachting companion who financed Today for Moley and when it was bumped off bought into the News-Week to give him a front seat, though now he hangs on at the tailboard, makes a pretense of fury at "Professor Arnold", "the last of the jongleurs". In his exasperation at the role he now plays, he spits upon the "anthropological approach", and ends in a suppressed obscenity, hoping that the sore headed servitor's yapping may keep his master Astor happy.

Henry Hazlitt, whose job is to 'soporify' conservative readers of the New York Times when a disturbing influence appears, pretends to be perplexed, and bewails that Arnold "ridicules the application of general principles on the ground that each event is unique" and that he treats law and economics as "part of the 'theology' of contemporary 'priests' ". He doesn't appreciate the 'satire'. He thinks Mr. Arnold 'rather pallid' and not 'fair'. But dissatisfied with his inability to make a case, he dismisses him as "merely what used to be called a sophist and is now better known as a smart aleck".

SCALELESS IN GAZA

Those from whose eyes the scales have fallen hail this humorous, satirical, and always good natured revelation of our follies, with joy and delight. David L. Cohn in the Atlantic speaks of this as "Fun at the Operating Table", "a brilliant, witty, corrosively skeptical examination of some of the myths and illusions by which man lives".

Clifton Fadiman finds it "one of the funniest examples of social satire since Voltaire", Ralph Thompson "one of the most penetrating and exciting political studies since Veblen". Alfred Bingham ranks it with Darwin's "Origin of Species". Stuart Chase calls him a new Machiavelli.

The book is great fun for those who have a sense of humor and are not permanently warped. You learn what a boob you have been. Once having looked out through Arnold's eyeholes, life is larger, solemn things are funnier. He finds the behavior of his fellows absorbing and enlightening. He writes, December 16, 1937:

"Whenever anyone claims that I am trying to destroy, I simply answer that I am describing, and whenever anyone accuses me of lack of enthusiasm for old institutions, I always insist that I am fond of them, and this is probably true. I like Yale with all its bourgeois characteristics. I like the jury trial in spite of the fact that it is not an investigation. I am probably one of the most thorough-going reactionaries in the United States. Unfortunately, no one seems to realize this."

WHAT LABOR DOESN'T WANT

The 14,000,000 who work for 200 corporations don't want to accept the "open shop" and the nine anachronistic principles laid down by the National Association of Manufacturers at its last convention. They want to preserve such liberties as they have won, since a hundred years ago it was a prison offense to join a union or to strike. But then indentured servants were still sold. And forty years after, black slaves were sold and flogged in these United States.

Sullen, despondent labor, with a smouldering sense of injustice, may lead to aggressive and belligerent leadership. The fault will lie not merely with labor or management, but with the indifferent citizen, the stock holder who derives income from labor and does not know or understand.

THE SPY SYSTEM

Labor does not want espionage. Nine volumes of sworn testimony in the investigation of the LaFollette Committee, prosecuted with scant funds, disclosed that labor espionage was a "common, almost universal practice in American industry . . . Large corporations rely on spies. No firm is too small to employ them."

"Said the report, 'The example of General Motors Corp. is amazing and terrifying in the picture it presents of management caught in a hopeless mass of corruption and distrust.' In two-and-a-half years General Motors paid nearly $1,000,000 for spy service. The plant managers began by hiring spies for their own use. Over this was a superstructure of espionage built by personnel managers of Fisher Body and Chevrolet. Then the top general management contracted secretly for still another spy service. By this time even the Pinkerton officials were 'bewildered'. But the payoff came when General Motors realized that the horde of spies had opened the corporation to leaks in trade and design secrets. Whereupon spy was set to spy on spy." (Time, January 3, 1938).

"General Motors Corporation, starting with one set of spies to report on unionization of its plants, felt compelled to employ a second set to report on the activities of the first group. Then, suspecting that trade secrets were being sold to commercial rivals by some of the spies to whom the company's records had been made available, a third outfit of spies was brought in to shadow the other two." (Boston Herald, December 22, 1937).

"No less than 304 Pinkerton operatives were admitted union members, about one-third union officials. One had bored his way to the vice-presidency of a national union, 14 were presidents of locals, eight were local vice presidents, 20 local secretaries . . . The Pinkertons were active in 93 national and international unions . . .

"Said the LaFollette report: 'Not only is the worker's freedom of association nullified by employer's spies but his freedom of action, of speech and assembly is completely destroyed. Fear harries his every footstep, caution muffles his words. He is in no sense any longer a free American.'" (Time, January 3, 1938).

HIGH COST OF SPYING

The business of selling 'protection' to manufacturers is reflected in a salesman's report to his head office on the sale to private firms of Green Band grenades, Jumper Repeaters, Tru-Flite shells, tear and emetic gas: "I am doing a lot of missionary work in anticipation of a strike this spring and I am in a position to send in some good orders if it will only mature. Wish a hell of a strike would get under way."

Spy Overhead: The Story of Industrial Espionage, Harcourt, Brace, 1937, by Clinch Calkins, is unpleasant, but as interesting as a detective story. From the published report of the Senate investigation she gleans that General Motors paid $819,000 in two years and seven months from 1933 to 1935 for spies, more than half of which went to Pinkerton detective agencies. $80,000,000 a year was paid by industry for stool pigeons, so-called detective agencies, wearing such titles as Railway Audit and Inspection Company.

The Labor Spy Racket, Modern Age Books, 1937, by Leo Huberman, is a 35¢ volume of 200 pages summarizing the findings of the LaFollette Civil Liberties Committee of the Senate. Condensed, it lacks the dramatic quality of the preceding. The author becomes emotional in telling of slugging guards, brutal beatings, and cowardly murders incident to enforcing 'Industry's' open shop and the much publicized 'American way'. The appendix lists 230 agencies,—and others have since come to public attention,—which supplied 100,000 spies to 429 clients, listed with the amounts paid to named agencies.

THE GENTLE ART OF 'HOOKING'

Labor Spy, by GT-99, Bobbs-Merrill, 1937, which Time called an "horrendous story", is anonymously published by this able man who after twenty-five years of service retired to live on a farm in Canada, where he is relatively safe from vengeance. GT-99 tells us how he was corrupted and how in turn he 'hooked' others. He wrote the equivalent of eighty volumes of reports. He became a high official in the A. F. of L. At the instance of his employers he was effective in organizing several companies of the National Guard, anticipating that they might be needed for strike duty. It is a thrilling detective story, the more so because it carries evidence of being truthful though fictionalized.

ORGANIZATION OPPOSITION

Thurman Arnold, Professor of Law at Yale, reviewing in The Yale Review, Winter, 1938, Robert R. R. Brooks' When Labor Organizes, Yale University Press, 1937, commends the author for a thoroughly academic study of labor problems, showing the causes that have led desperate labor to organize. Brooks, assistant professor of economics at Williams College, sometime fellow of Trumbull College, Yale, dispassionately discloses the technique of how the labor union is built by professional organizers, of how it is combatted by professional spies. The current methods of striker and strike breaker are concretely illustrated. Photographs show the Chicago police killing ten paraders and wounding a hundred in the spring of 1937, and the gangster technique of Ford guards in action at the Dearborn plant.

"The trials and investigations in the Black Legion murder cases showed that the Legion was an avowedly antiunion organization, had had a hand in breaking automobile unions and strikes in 1934, and was related to the espionage systems of large automobile manufacturing concerns."

The history of labor is rapidly summarized from Commons' classic studies. The C. I. O. is briefly treated, perhaps, as Thurman Arnold says, because "the penalties imposed on a scholar for making a wrong guess are so drastic that one can scarcely blame Professor Brooks for declining to take a chance."

C. I. O.: Industrial Unionism in Action, Norton, 1937, is by J. Raymond Walsh, former popular instructor in economics at Harvard, whose interest in the subject made him persona non grata. Written with the enthusiastic cooperation of his students, this is a lively, readable story, freshly and interestingly told, with flashbacks to the history of labor over a period of thirty years.

LABOR CORPORATIONS

British labor unions, Professor Brooks tells us, are not incorporated, merely registered as benefit societies. He concludes that without incorporation "the American labor movement is probably no worse, perhaps better, than American business in the matter of financial reports and responsibility".

In his "Folklore", Arnold remarks that if labor incorporates, it might raise money on capitalized future earning power, as do other corporations.

THE FEAR PSYCHOSIS

"The fear psychosis is the factor determining the course of civilization today," Dr. Clarence Cook Little, former president of the University of Michigan, told financial and industrial leaders at the Boston meeting of the New England Council, November, 1937. They had no come back. They accepted it as true.

FEAR EVERYWHERE

John D. Rockefeller, Jr., a few evenings later at International House was telling a dinner gathering, "A glance at the world of today reveals the fact that fear stalks the earth like a specter in the night."

"Many of the commencement addresses of 1937 have a note of misgiving and of fear," an editorial writer in the Boston Herald complained. "The uneasiness of these commencement speakers, who are not given to impulsive thinking or reckless talk, is not an isolated thing . . . The average citizen, too, has a vague feeling that all is not well." Teachers and college trustees, as we have seen, are jittery.

"The church is afraid. It sees reason for fear in everything," writes Rollo Walter Brown in the December Harper's. "All over the country I hear clergy and official laity express to their adherents one great fear after another . . . priests of every sort express even more desperate fears . . . churchmen everywhere express the fear of a proletarian uprising that will have as a part of its program the suppression of the church."

Labor and management fear each other. Vested interests fear government, and government fears them. The nations fear each other, and everywhere we hear "ancestral voices prophesying war."

THE FRIGHTENED THIRTIES

The fatuous twenties was a period of frivolity, of wild extravagance, until the bubble burst in '29. In the twenties we scorned the Soviets for bringing to Geneva a proposal for general disarmament. France, ignoring her part of the Versailles Treaty, increased her armament, bled Germany white, marched her troops into the Ruhr, requisitioned the daughters of the Rhine for their Senegalese troops, paralyzed German industry, and sowed the seeds of hatred.

The greater part of the wealth tht is now produced by labor, we spend to the profit of a few in preparation to kill and to pay for the past killings. Little wonder that we are jittery with fear.

"The Frightened Thirties" this decade will be called, H. G. Wells predicted in his November lecture in Boston.

WHAT IS FEAR?

The phlegmatic moron has fewer fears than the nervously organized and active minded. The clam is proverbially happy. Lacking the highly developed endocrine and sympathetic systems of the higher animals, its emotions are not so complex. It is not so excitable. It knows a lesser number of fears.

Fear is conscious anticipation of impending catastrophe to one's body, possessions, or hopes. It is dependent upon ganglionic storehouses of memory, interconnected by association tracts. With growing complexity of this neural and endocrine apparatus, hopes and fears have multiplied and may for another million years. Growth of altruistic attitudes, of social consciousness, increases our hopes and fears for others.

In the last analysis, fear is anticipation and consequence of a negative tropism. A paramecium approaching a poisonous particle with which it has had experience, halts, reverses its course and retreats. Fear has survival value. Those whose fear came early escaped the danger and survived. Those who did not react quickly enough were killed generations ago. Don't be fearless. When you see a cornice falling, be scared, move!

THE CAUSE OF OUR FEARS

"Partial ignorance and inability to control things and situations produce fear . . . Fear, having been induced in the controllers of capital and industry, is through them created in those seeking political or social preferment. From these, fear is communicated . . . Insidious pressure and intimidation control the teaching profession," wrote Dr. A. O. Bowden, University of Southern California, in "Fear—the Master Enemy", School and Society, January 9, 1937.

When nothing is threatened it is easy to be individual and independent. In the face of impending disaster, filled with fear of violence and sudden death, our critical faculties are paralyzed. Like sheep we huddle together for collective action. Then there may be more danger from panic and stampede than from the wolves. Startled, we may respond to false leadership, and blind and insane from fright plunge over a cliff to destruction.

Most of our leaders dare not face reality. They turn their backs on new facts, vainly hoping to escape trouble. Behind so called philosophies, excuses, wishful thinking, they attempt to hide or escape. For comfort they offer old sentimentalities and platitudes. They would retreat to the past.

It is traditions and inherited attitudes, laid down in former times, that keep us ignorant. The dead hand is heavy upon us.

It shackles, enslaves, holds us back. It keeps us fearful, prevents us from investigating and learning. It denies to youth the joys of exploring, of discovering.

So we kill divine curiosity. We deny youth the thrill of discovery. Frustrated, the world seems drab, so he longs for excitement. Even war is release. We leave the field open for the Hitlers and Mussolinis. And only a few clear sighted men are bold enough to speak up.

WHAT WE DO FEAR

"Every new discovery which threatens to change the social order strikes terror in the heart of man. It threatens his established habits and his position in the community. Only the pure scientist, whose passion is great enough to block out the fear of newness, seems to escape," writes Leslie C. Barber in 'The Age of Schizophrenia', Harpers, December, 1937.

"Modern man is still plagued with fears: the fear of economic collapse which will mean poverty, the fear of disease which will mean death or disability worse than death, the fear of war which gathers into and totals in itself all the other dreads. The only one of these fears that has been approached with anything approximating the scientific method is the second; and it is the only one in which any decided progress has been made," writes George W. Gray in "The Advancing Front of Science."

We fear only the unknown. When we understand this, then fear may become a great driving force to solve the mysteries ahead, and so dispel fear.

But most of us have only one fear, that we will lose our possessions, something we have. If we had more fears, if we feared that we would fail to gain something ahead, then we would get on and the world would move faster. It was mere blind fear that sent the animal in retreat. From this negative tropism, the result of chemical reaction, our nervous systems have made it possible for us to anticipate and create the future. A time of change like the present holds the greatest promise for those who can understand and master their fears.

"Nothing in life is to be feared," said Marie Curie, "it is only to be understood."

NATIONS GONE MAD

Except for the dictators, the leaders of the nations are confused puppets. They don't know what to do, and so they sing the Gilbertian lines, "The world, in short, which never was extravagantly sane, developed all the signs of inflammation of the brain" (A. P. Herbert). "I think civilization has gone crazy," remarks Sir Evelyn Wrench, publisher of the London Spectator, and British propagandist in America, and Lord Horder, before the Royal Institution of Great Britain, says war is "the greatest of all modern diseases . . . primarily a disease of the mind."

A PSEUDO-PSYCHIATRIC DIAGNOSIS

Even psychiatrists,—and there is a fringe here,—similarly misled, attribute diseases to nations, figments of our imagination, as though they were real persons. "The world today is insane", writes S. H. Kraines, lecturer on mental diseases at the National Hospital for Diseases of the Nervous System, London, in Science, October 22, 1937. He characterizes the different nations as follows: "United States . . . typical manic-depressive psychosis . . . happy, elated, very active, dreaming great dreams, doing many things beyond its capacity and speaking loudly of the success which it is achieving . . . Following the crash in 1929 came the depressive episode . . . marked ebbing of energy . . . bad dreams, fears.

"England, solid, settled, conservative, somewhat apprehensive. France, an elderly, fearful spinster suffering from an excessive emotionalism and apprehensiveness . . . unstable, brilliant but unreliable . . . excessively dependent on her brother, John Bull.

"Germany, capable, full of energy, logical . . . depression chronic . . . paranoid ideas . . . feels that other peoples are to blame for her own inadequacy. Italy, feeble-minded person who has seen others grow great, who envies them . . . much blowing of the horn, beatings upon the chest.

"Russia, strong young man, just passed through the throes of puberty . . . internal conflict with emotional discord. China, middle-aged, lazy, calm, philosophical . . . becoming irritable."

MYTH AND REALITY

Such an attitude is based on acceptance of the fallacy of the group mind. Nations, like corporations, we personify. The former are always feminine, to be defended. That stimulates mob patriotism. We invest corporations with personal attributes to give them legal standing in our courts.

It is the stupid, confused men in control who are responsible. It is the man who stands at the throttle who starts the engine. The engine doesn't go insane, but the engineer may. It isn't the nation that is sadistic, but the men who run it. But it protects them and relieves them of responsibility to promote such nationalistic myths. And so we say, "What will Italy do?" "England expects every man to do his duty".

A simpler explanation than that the nations have gone crazy is that peoples long deprived are gaining strength to move against those that have. But to move even a depressed people requires a leader. If the intellectuals, the natural leaders, betray them, men like Mussolini and Hitler and Stalin will arise from lower classes.

Italy, Germany and Japan have dense and increasing populations, and lack territory, resources and food. Henry I. Harri-man, New England power magnate, returning from Europe, naively said out loud what almost no other has, that there can be no peace until the have-not nations are appeased. Hoover, six months later, missed this.

Ambassador William E. Dodd, on his return to America, pointed out the selfish blunders of the nations since the war,—twenty months of blockade of helpless Germany, deprived of food and necessities.

FOLKLORE AND PROPAGANDA

But those who are in control will permit no such simple explanation, nor will their statesmen puppets or the diplomats who palaver for them. They foster folklore among the people. With the press kept in leash, they help to create from poor human material mythical heroes for the people to worship. Tabus are sustained or set up.

Propaganda machines are organized which arouse animosity and create hatreds to conceal underlying purposes. In the confusion and waste resulting, shrewd Levantines like Zaharoff hope to win something now just beyond their reach. The stupid brutes can't see beyond their own selfish, immediate profit.

Education in such hands becomes vicious. "The writers of texts impregnated with the spirit of intense nationalism are laying the psychological foundations, not of national security but of a new war," we quoted in the 1916-27 edition of this HANDBOOK from J. F. Scott's "The Menace of Nationalism in Education".

"Education today throughout the world is . . . to convince the people of the merit of their rulers and to make them docile", write John K. and Margaret A. Norton after a 1937 trip around the world. (A. A. U. W. Journal, April, 1938.)

BRITAIN'S POLICY

The suppressed nations, deprived of territory and resources, have continued to breed and multiply, while in England and France the birth rate has declined. Their desire to expand, to get food, to continue to exist, has led to general rearmament. If wiser statesmen had granted them what they have and will seize, it would have been less costly. There would be less hatred and more security. Not in Denmark but elsewhere things are rotten. Trouble is brewing. Something must break.

ENGLAND'S PREDICAMENT

Lord Astor has patiently expounded the steps by which the democratic countries since the war killed democracy in republican Germany and socialist Austria. In 1931 the English Labor government and France "objected very strongly to the proposed customs union although both Germany and Austria were then democracies . . . Geneva and The Hague was invoked to stop the union . . . The outside world made Germany feel that she could only get redress of grievances by use of force . . . Two years ago, even one year ago, Germany was anxious to discuss and settle by negotiation certain outstanding questions. Britain and the outside world held back . . . If past foreign secretaries had been more far-sighted, there would possibly not have been a dictatorship in Germany." (Boston Herald, April 3, 1938.)

ENGLAND EXPECTS

"England is stamped with the symptoms of decay. The British empire is on the decline. Night has settled over England . . . foes gather . . . Britain looks to the United States for support", Charles Beard writes in Events, November, 1937, reviewing Quincy Howe's England Expects Every American To Do His Duty, Simon and Schuster, 1937.

Howe, virile and vigorous Boston scion, is a realist. He knows his England and loves it, but America more, and does not like to see us made fools or puppets. As editor of The Living Age he first exposed the collusion of the armament makers of France and Germany during the past war, which Fortune later exploited in their influential article "Arms and the Man", out of which grew Senator Nye's investigation of the munitions business.

Howe understands with Pareto and Machiavelli that every country is controlled by "a small minority that devotes itself to the business of government," but that "never since the days of ancient Rome has so much power remained concentrated in so few hands for so long a period as in the United Kingdom of Great Britain and its overseas Empire." He exposes British propaganda in high places, the universities, the New York Times, the Foreign Policy Association, and numerous other organizations. He shows how our statesmen have usually been taken in by the British, and reveals the cultural and social propaganda constantly maintained in this country.

Then there are the churches and the schools. Howe writes, "American governing classes . . . prefer to commune with their Maker in the exclusive atmosphere of the Episcopal Church which grew from England's official national church. The private boarding schools . . . are modeled on Eton, Harrow, and Winchester. The cult of the gentleman and the gospel of 'fair play' originated in England."

BRITISH PROPAGANDA

Howe's book was coldly received by reviewers and editorial writers, blinded or nose ringed by the British propaganda machine. He is too bold and dogmatic even for most Anglophobes. The Nation which now leans toward any influence that isn't anti-semitic editorializes it under the title "Anti-British Hysteria". Howe made a swift comeback to which The Nation entered protest that they were not reviewing, only soliloquizing. William MacDonald in the New York Times, Anglophile propaganda medium, characterizes it as "a curious mixture of fact, fear, exaggerated emphasis and unpleasant temper".

Robert Morss Lovett in The New Republic reminds us of the "thesis of Mr. Alleyne Ireland that the United States has never been independent" and adds, "If cultural, financial and political forces are strong enough to keep us within the orbit of the British system, at least let us know clearly that we do so for our own reasons based on the kind of world we want. Never again must we surrender, as once before, the independence of the United States to the influence of British propaganda, the arrogance of British interference with our legislatures, courts and cabinets, the treachery of ambassadors, or the subservience of those whom Mr. Lamont felicitously describes as 'the best people who lived along the Eastern seaboard'." Mr. Lamont's Saturday Literary Review, abstaining from review and the literary, begins, "Mr. Howe suffers from an aggravated case of Anglophobia and has written this book to get it off his chest."

AMERICA, THE CATSPAW

In the ensuing months England and events have justified Howe's statements. British propagandists, courteous, generous, idealistic, have flooded Americans with flattery. Our Secretary of State has done everything to please Great Britain. Elliott

Paul, American author of "The Life and Death of a Spanish Town", says "Cordell Hull is nothing but a catspaw of Britain's Downing Street. He is acting against the will and spirit of the American people, believers in their fellow democrats in Spain, who are being sold out after the most magnificent defense of national rights in modern history." (Boston Herald, November 13, 1937.)

The Town Hall in New York, which Howe had challenged as dominated by British propaganda was obliged to ask him to speak, but saw to it that there were three British propagandists to oppose him, one a very able woman. In Boston, the Foreign Policy Association let him speak against somewhat lesser odds. Howe was obliged to put his neck out first, and again stated (Boston Herald, April 3, 1938) that England "faces either a peaceful surrender of its vast possessions or a violent war to keep them. If the present reactionary government stays in power, it will have to hand over the empire. If Eden wins over Chamberlain, you will find the British Liberals and Laborites defending the empire in a way—with the United States expected to join."

SNOBBERY AND SNUBBERY

How the English system of snobbery and snubbery extends across the water so as to hold America true to British purposes is made clear with some heat by Howe. It is humiliating to him as an American to see the way a Balfour, Gray or Runciman puts it over on our American diplomats and statesmen. Our war Ambassador Page worked to bring us into a war for Britain. Our late Ambassador Bingham pictured Americans and British fighting side by side in the next war. It remains to be seen what British savoir vivre and savoir faire will do to our Irish Catholic ambassador. No land is so beautiful, no people live so comfortably, none can overwhelm one so completely with interest and hospitality, but they never forget their main purpose. The subtlety and skill of English propaganda methods are only becoming apparent to us cruder Americans.

Their more effective method of control we do not yet so well comprehend. The ruling class of England better than any other people understand how through snobbery and snubbery the caste system may be maintained. Their nabobs learned this in India. The nearer you get to London the more you appreciate how effective may be even a lifted eyebrow. It may do more than a sneer or the sword.

So England maintains her supremacy over peoples whom she proves inferior, while with judicious propaganda and socialistic sops she keeps her middle and lower classes fooled and docile.

THE BREEDING GROUND OF IMPERIALISM

From the English breed, the noblest the world has seen, still come men who can face indomitable odds with steadfast purpose,—poets whose burning lines lead youth to aspiration or revolt. England's champions first shook the shackles from the slave. England's adventurous youth first opened the seas to trade. It was the English breed that planted all the western world.

ENGLISH PUBLIC SCHOOLS AND IMPERIALISM

But on the playing fields of Eton, Harrow and the other Public Schools, and under the caning of their head masters, have been trained the hard bitten and polished snobs who fill the offices and play the puppets for those who have controlled the world's destinies. These shrewder men who derive the profit from England's imperialism, use the Public School puppets as their pawns. And so well are they trained to act their part that few suspect the men behind.

England's Public Schools have supplied what the system wanted. Their by-product, failures, are remittance men, thrown on the imperial scrap heap. The great men of England, the thinkers, the scientists, the poets, have escaped the Public School. None have so strongly denounced the sadistic 'hardening' system of producing English leaders as those who have been through it (cf. this HANDBOOK, 15th ed. pp. 90. 91; 19th ed. pp. 89-92). Etonians of mental stature from William Pitt the elder to Aldous Huxley, hated the system.

Laurence Housman, dramatist brother of the poet, in his autobiographical The Unexpected Years, Bobbs Merrill, 1936, tells us, "I am inclined to think that the divine right of imperialism to swagger through the world, exploiting subject races for their supposed benefit has very largely had its origin in the bullying and fagging which have been countenanced in our public schools . . .

"Defenders of the Public School System—as it existed in my days, and as they would like it to continue—maintain that bullying of small boys is good for them, and has a healthy and hardening effect on their characters. It may be so; but what of its effect on those who do the bullying? It seems to me a cowardly and despicable thing for the strong to afflict the weak . . .

"I now regard my school life as a miserable one—a life beset with repressions, snubs, ignominy, and a general sense of unfitness to my environment, and though it had in it horrid moments of pain, apprehension, and paralysing fear, I am quite sure that I was not continuously miserable or even depressed. The young have infinite powers of evasion; disposing Fate stands over and claims them—they are not the masters of it; but they often manage to dodge it, and belong again to themselves."

THE OLD SCHOOL TIE

The system of training and seeding has been modified from its monastic origins to meet the needs of rising mercantilism and imperialism. The selection is exclusive, dependent largely on birth or father's income, but those who undergo the training, however low their I.Q., have income and position for life. If government and finance do not provide, the church will.

The Very Rev. Philemon F. Sturges, dean of St. Paul's Cathedral, was reported in the Boston Transcript as saying, in speaking of the union of the American church with the Anglo-Catholic church in England, "The Anglican church enjoys an income of about fifteen and a half billion dollars a year from the vast properties acquired from the Church of Rome in the sixteenth century."

Quincy Howe assures us that "you do not have to have attended one of Britain's exclusive public schools to become a bishop, a member of the House of Lords, an admiral, a permanent under-secretary for foreign affairs, a governor of the Bank of England, or a prime minister." But today twenty-five of the fifty-eight ministers, and an even larger proportion of the foreign service, parliamentarians, bank directors, are Public School men. "One-third of all Cabinet Ministers in the last hundred years have come from either Eton or Harrow . . . twelve of the nineteen Prime Ministers during the same period". Eton alone claims one-sixth of all the present members of Parliament and ten of Britain's prime ministers.

This 'badge of the ruling class', 'the old school tie', that "proclaims that its wearer is not, thank God, as other men", is interestingly explained by Edward Acheson in "The Old School Tie", Esquire, April, 1937. He tells us that Stanley Baldwin, when called to form a Government, expressed the hope that his "should be a Government of which Harrow should not be ashamed", and called to his ministry six old Harrovian school-chums.

THE CASTE SYSTEM

Professor John Hilton of Cambridge University, England, in January, 1938, carried to Oxford his crusade inveighing against the caste system and the Public Schools. There he reported that 52 of 56 bishops, 19 of 24 deans, 122 of 156 county court judges and recorders, 152 of 210 civil servants paid more than £1000 annually, and 20 of 21 cabinet ministers are public school men. "To get a place in these 'reserved stalls'," he says, "you must have been at the right school and be entitled through life to wear the right school tie".

In Understanding the English, Whittlesey House, 1937, James Howard Wellard, who has lived in America long enough to understand his countrymen, attempts to explain to Americans the major mysteries of the "old school tie", but warns them that they "will find it difficult to envisage a state in which some 95 per cent of the population receive no formal education at all". Of course, they have gone to school, but as they "have not attended an exclusive public school . . . they have not, in the English sense, acquired an education". They have not learned to "speak in a certain superior manner, dress with the passionless formality which so impresses the outside world, and generally conduct themselves with that formidable aloofness which, together with boiled shirts, upholds the empire in the most remote corners of the earth".

PERFIDIOUS ALBION

"In the manipulation of information the British are past masters. They had a lot of experience in molding opinion as they built up the Empire. Every device to paint their own activities as commendable and the activities of others as abhorrent, was carefully studied out. Most of the African Empire was acquired under the device of abolishing slavery; but when Mussolini gave that reason for the invasion of Ethiopia it was scorned and belittled. The idea is to make mountains out of molehills and molehills out of mountains—depending on whether Britain or some other nation commits an act likely to arouse public protest."

This is quoted from Looking Behind The Censorships, Lippincott, 1938, by Eugene J. Young, cable editor of The New York Times and a life long foreign news man. Adolph S. Ochs, former owner of The Times revealed how, at the Washington Arms Conference of 1921-22 it was arranged that Britain should police the Atlantic, America the Pacific, "our main fleet being kept in it as a restraint on the ambitious Japan. This arrangement also was intended to safeguard Canada, Australia and New Zealand and to keep China open for British trade and protect the vast British interests".

ANACHRONISTIC EDUCATION

New volumes are constantly appearing which record the old boy's adherence to and belief in the brutal crudities of the English Public School. The new head master at Eton won applause demonstrating his vigor by personally flogging one hundred and ten boys in his first year.

MEDIEVAL SURVIVALS

Our Great Public Schools: Their Traditions, Customs and Games, by Frederick A. M. Webster, Ward, Lock & Co., Ltd., 1937, tells the ancient hallowed tales of two score of these schools, arranged in alphabetical order.

In Changing Eton: A Survey of Conditions based on the History of Eton since the Royal Commission of 1862-64, Jonathan Cape, 1937, L. S. R. Byrne and E. L. Churchill sentimentally weep over the changes which must come faster if England is to be saved. But they show that education for them still means mere rote learning. "For . . . education . . . there are certain essentials. The first is thoroughness . . . The good teacher will . . . repeat the same thing in the same way for, not two or three but a dozen or more times."

Ronald Gurney in I Chose Teaching, Dent, London, 1937, sat down to write of his life as a teacher, resolving "I will, for once, have no truck with platitude or convention or rationalization of motive". More of a dissenter than most, he still believes that school boys should 'fag', be 'hardened' with the cane by prefects and masters.

In "A Headmaster Remembers" and now A Headmaster Reflects, Hodge, London, 1937, Guy Kendall, enlightened and liberal head for twenty years of the University College School, Hampstead, writes of the Montessori and Dalton innovations. He is critical of the absurdities of the Public School system, of the sex aberrations in the homosexual boarding schools. He believes in the use of the cane, but deplors the sadistic tendencies of so many masters. He sees some good in the 'hardening' system of 'bullying, fagging, and ragging', but condemns it on the whole. In England he is regarded as a liberal and a foe of the classics, but he attributes all he is to the study of the classics which constituted his sole education.

SADISTIC RIGHTEOUSNESS

In the popular story and play "The House Master" by Ian Hay the humor resides in the old primitive, sadistic, Aristophanic delight at seeing the helpless subjected to pain and obliged to take it with apparent gratitude, smouldering within, while the smug inflictor comforts himself with a sense of righteousness. The master was disappointed in love in his youth and lived a sex-starved life. 'She' died and leaves twin boy and girl orphans to his care. Famed for his strong right arm and accurate and steady eye, he has just finished 'caning the boy' when the twin sister and two of her girl friends arrive from Paris to stay with him.

Here is an erotic complex of the kind that appeals to old men who collect curiosa and erotica and which seems especially to delight school masters. There is no great harm in such eroticism if one recognizes it for what it is. But when a people practice eroticism and sadism in the name of altruism and righteousness, they are hypocrites, mentally and morally deformed. Blind to his own defects the Public School boy to the Continentals represents Albion which they dub perfidious.

France followed closely in England's imperial footsteps in assuming 'the white man's burden' and British methods in Africa and Asia. The Italians have been slow to learn and apply Britain's methods in Ethiopia. Now the Japanese in China are proving apt pupils, using the same method and phraseology.

PROGRESSIVE SCHOOLS OF THE PAST

This anachronistic education isn't very old. The antiquity of the Public Schools is greatly exaggerated. The oldest, attached to monasteries, were mere schools for clerks to teach the reading and writing of Latin, then essential. Most of the English Public Schools and universities, too, were at very low ebb, in a degraded condition, almost out of existence up to within two hundred years. Eton was established by Henry VIII for poor boys as a part of his reform-ation, after he had destroyed the monastic establishments which had become a burden on the country. Eton was the 'progressive school' of the time.

"The Protestant Reformers appealed to the recognized authority of scripture to show that the priestly practices were innovations. They had to make the scriptures an open book . . . Instruction in Latin and Greek was a corollary of the doctrine of the open bible. This prompted the great educational innovation of John Knox and abetted the more parsimonious founding of grammar schools in England." (Lancelot Hogben, "Mathematics for the Million").

The grammar schools of England which were copied in the American colonies, were innovations in response to the demand that Latin might be known to other than the priests. Later English grammar became of importance to the mercantile class that they might use their language to defend their prerogatives.

NATIONS GONE MAD

Except for the dictators, the leaders of the nations are confused puppets. They don't know what to do, and so they sing the Gilbertian lines, "The world, in short, which never was extravagantly sane, developed all the signs of inflammation of the brain" (A. P. Herbert). "I think civilization has gone crazy," remarks Sir Evelyn Wrench, publisher of the London Spectator, and British propagandist in America, and Lord Horder, before the Royal Institution of Great Britain, says war is "the greatest of all modern diseases . . . primarily a disease of the mind."

A PSEUDO-PSYCHIATRIC DIAGNOSIS

Even psychiatrists,—and there is a fringe here,—similarly misled, attribute diseases to nations, figments of our imagination, as though they were real persons. "The world today is insane", writes S. H. Kraines, lecturer on mental diseases at the National Hospital for Diseases of the Nervous System, London, in Science, October 22, 1937. He characterizes the different nations as follows: "United States . . . typical manic-depressive psychosis . . . happy, elated, very active, dreaming great dreams, doing many things beyond its capacity and speaking loudly of the success which it is achieving . . . Following the crash in 1929 came the depressive episode . . . marked ebbing of energy . . . bad dreams, fears.

"England, solid, settled, conservative, somewhat apprehensive. France, an elderly, fearful spinster suffering from an excessive emotionalism and apprehensiveness . . . unstable, brilliant but unreliable . . . excessively dependent on her brother, John Bull.

"Germany, capable, full of energy, logical . . . depression chronic . . . paranoid ideas . . . feels that other peoples are to blame for her own inadequacy. Italy, feeble-minded person who has seen others grow great, who envies them . . . much blowing of the horn, beatings upon the chest.

"Russia, strong young man, just passed through the throes of puberty . . . internal conflict with emotional discord. China, middle-aged, lazy, calm, philosophical . . . becoming irritable."

MYTH AND REALITY

Such an attitude is based on acceptance of the fallacy of the group mind. Nations, like corporations, we personify. The former are always feminine, to be defended. That stimulates mob patriotism. We invest corporations with personal attributes to give them legal standing in our courts.

It is the stupid, confused men in control who are responsible. It is the man who stands at the throttle who starts the engine. The engine doesn't go insane, but the engineer may. It isn't the nation that is sadistic, but the men who run it. But it protects them and relieves them of responsibility to promote such nationalistic myths. And so we say, "What will Italy do?" "England expects every man to do his duty".

A simpler explanation than that the nations have gone crazy is that peoples long deprived are gaining strength to move against those that have. But to move even a depressed people requires a leader. If the intellectuals, the natural leaders, betray them, men like Mussolini and Hitler and Stalin will arise from lower classes.

Italy, Germany and Japan have dense and increasing populations, and lack territory, resources and food. Henry I. Harri-man, New England power magnate, returning from Europe, naively said out loud what almost no other has, that there can be no peace until the have-not nations are appeased. Hoover, six months later, missed this.

Ambassador William E. Dodd, on his return to America, pointed out the selfish blunders of the nations since the war,—twenty months of blockade of helpless Germany, deprived of food and necessities.

FOLKLORE AND PROPAGANDA

But those who are in control will permit no such simple explanation, nor will their statesmen puppets or the diplomats who palaver for them. They foster folklore among the people. With the press kept in leash, they help to create from poor human material mythical heroes for the people to worship. Tabus are sustained or set up.

Propaganda machines are organized which arouse animosity and create hatreds to conceal underlying purposes. In the confusion and waste resulting, shrewd Levantines like Zaharoff hope to win something now just beyond their reach. The stupid brutes can't see beyond their own selfish, immediate profit.

Education in such hands becomes vicious. "The writers of texts impregnated with the spirit of intense nationalism are laying the psychological foundations, not of national security but of a new war," we quoted in the 1916-27 edition of this HANDBOOK from J. F. Scott's "The Menace of Nationalism in Education".

"Education today throughout the world is . . . to convince the people of the merit of their rulers and to make them docile", write John K. and Margaret A. Norton after a 1937 trip around the world. (A. A. U. W. Journal, April, 1938.)

BRITAIN'S POLICY

The suppressed nations, deprived of territory and resources, have continued to breed and multiply, while in England and France the birth rate has declined. Their desire to expand, to get food, to continue to exist, has led to general rearmament. If wiser statesmen had granted them what they have and will seize, it would have been less costly. There would be less hatred and more security. Not in Denmark but elsewhere things are rotten. Trouble is brewing. Something must break.

ENGLAND'S PREDICAMENT

Lord Astor has patiently expounded the steps by which the democratic countries since the war killed democracy in republican Germany and socialist Austria. In 1931 the English Labor government and France "objected very strongly to the proposed customs union although both Germany and Austria were then democracies . . . Geneva and The Hague was invoked to stop the union . . . The outside world made Germany feel that she could only get redress of grievances by use of force . . . Two years ago, even one year ago, Germany was anxious to discuss and settle by negotiation certain outstanding questions. Britain and the outside world held back . . . If past foreign secretaries had been more far-sighted, there would possibly not have been a dictatorship in Germany." (Boston Herald, April 3, 1938.)

ENGLAND EXPECTS

"England is stamped with the symptoms of decay. The British empire is on the decline. Night has settled over England . . . foes gather . . . Britain looks to the United States for support", Charles Beard writes in Events, November, 1937, reviewing Quincy Howe's England Expects Every American To Do His Duty, Simon and Schuster, 1937.

Howe, virile and vigorous Boston scion, is a realist. He knows his England and loves it, but America more, and does not like to see us made fools or puppets. As editor of The Living Age he first exposed the collusion of the armament makers of France and Germany during the past war, which Fortune later exploited in their influential article "Arms and the Man", out of which grew Senator Nye's investigation of the munitions business.

Howe understands with Pareto and Machiavelli that every country is controlled by "a small minority that devotes itself to the business of government," but that "never since the days of ancient Rome has so much power remained concentrated in so few hands for so long a period as in the United Kingdom of Great Britain and its overseas Empire." He exposes British propaganda in high places, the universities, the New York Times, the Foreign Policy Association, and numerous other organizations. He shows how our statesmen have usually been taken in by the British, and reveals the cultural and social propaganda constantly maintained in this country.

Then there are the churches and the schools. Howe writes, "American governing classes . . . prefer to commune with their Maker in the exclusive atmosphere of the Episcopal Church which grew from England's official national church. The private boarding schools . . . are modeled on Eton, Harrow, and Winchester. The cult of the gentleman and the gospel of 'fair play' originated in England."

BRITISH PROPAGANDA

Howe's book was coldly received by reviewers and editorial writers, blinded or nose ringed by the British propaganda machine. He is too bold and dogmatic even for most Anglophobes. The Nation which now leans toward any influence that isn't anti-semitic editorializes it under the title "Anti-British Hysteria". Howe made a swift comeback to which The Nation entered protest that they were not reviewing, only soliloquizing. William MacDonald in the New York Times, Anglophile propaganda medium, characterizes it as "a curious mixture of fact, fear, exaggerated emphasis and unpleasant temper".

Robert Morss Lovett in The New Republic reminds us of the "thesis of Mr. Alleyne Ireland that the United States has never been independent" and adds, "If cultural, financial and political forces are strong enough to keep us within the orbit of the British system, at least let us know clearly that we do so for our own reasons based on the kind of world we want. Never again must we surrender, as once before, the independence of the United States to the influence of British propaganda, the arrogance of British interference with our legislatures, courts and cabinets, the treachery of ambassadors, or the subservience of those whom Mr. Lamont felicitously describes as 'the best people who lived along the Eastern seaboard'." Mr. Lamont's Saturday Literary Review, abstaining from review and the literary, begins, "Mr. Howe suffers from an aggravated case of Anglophobia and has written this book to get it off his chest."

AMERICA, THE CATSPAW

In the ensuing months England and events have justified Howe's statements. British propagandists, courteous, generous, idealistic, have flooded Americans with flattery. Our Secretary of State has done everything to please Great Britain. Elliott

Paul, American author of "The Life and Death of a Spanish Town", says "Cordell Hull is nothing but a catspaw of Britain's Downing Street. He is acting against the will and spirit of the American people, believers in their fellow democrats in Spain, who are being sold out after the most magnificent defense of national rights in modern history." (Boston Herald, November 13, 1937.)

The Town Hall in New York, which Howe had challenged as dominated by British propaganda was obliged to ask him to speak, but saw to it that there were three British propagandists to oppose him, one a very able woman. In Boston, the Foreign Policy Association let him speak against somewhat lesser odds. Howe was obliged to put his neck out first, and again stated (Boston Herald, April 3, 1938) that England "faces either a peaceful surrender of its vast possessions or a violent war to keep them. If the present reactionary government stays in power, it will have to hand over the empire. If Eden wins over Chamberlain, you will find the British Liberals and Laborites defending the empire in a way—with the United States expected to join."

SNOBBERY AND SNUBBERY

How the English system of snobbery and snubbery extends across the water so as to hold America true to British purposes is made clear with some heat by Howe. It is humiliating to him as an American to see the way a Balfour, Gray or Runciman puts it over on our American diplomats and statesmen. Our war Ambassador Page worked to bring us into a war for Britain. Our late Ambassador Bingham pictured Americans and British fighting side by side in the next war. It remains to be seen what British savoir vivre and savoir faire will do to our Irish Catholic ambassador. No land is so beautiful, no people live so comfortably, none can overwhelm one so completely with interest and hospitality, but they never forget their main purpose. The subtlety and skill of English propaganda methods are only becoming apparent to us cruder Americans.

Their more effective method of control we do not yet so well comprehend. The ruling class of England better than any other people understand how through snobbery and snubbery the caste system may be maintained. Their nabobs learned this in India. The nearer you get to London the more you appreciate how effective may be even a lifted eyebrow. It may do more than a sneer or the sword.

So England maintains her supremacy over peoples whom she proves inferior, while with judicious propaganda and socialistic sops she keeps her middle and lower classes fooled and docile.

THE BREEDING GROUND OF IMPERIALISM

From the English breed, the noblest the world has seen, still come men who can face indomitable odds with steadfast purpose,—poets whose burning lines lead youth to aspiration or revolt. England's champions first shook the shackles from the slave. England's adventurous youth first opened the seas to trade. It was the English breed that planted all the western world.

ENGLISH PUBLIC SCHOOLS AND IMPERIALISM

But on the playing fields of Eton, Harrow and the other Public Schools, and under the caning of their head masters, have been trained the hard bitten and polished snobs who fill the offices and play the puppets for those who have controlled the world's destinies. These shrewder men who derive the profit from England's imperialism, use the Public School puppets as their pawns. And so well are they trained to act their part that few suspect the men behind.

England's Public Schools have supplied what the system wanted. Their by-product, failures, are remittance men, thrown on the imperial scrap heap. The great men of England, the thinkers, the scientists, the poets, have escaped the Public School. None have so strongly denounced the sadistic 'hardening' system of producing English leaders as those who have been through it (cf. this HANDBOOK, 15th ed. pp. 90. 91; 19th ed. pp. 89-92). Etonians of mental stature from William Pitt the elder to Aldous Huxley, hated the system.

Laurence Housman, dramatist brother of the poet, in his autobiographical The Unexpected Years, Bobbs Merrill, 1936, tells us, "I am inclined to think that the divine right of imperialism to swagger through the world, exploiting subject races for their supposed benefit has very largely had its origin in the bullying and fagging which have been countenanced in our public schools . . .

"Defenders of the Public School System—as it existed in my days, and as they would like it to continue—maintain that bullying of small boys is good for them, and has a healthy and hardening effect on their characters. It may be so; but what of its effect on those who do the bullying? It seems to me a cowardly and despicable thing for the strong to afflict the weak . . .

"I now regard my school life as a miserable one—a life beset with repressions, snubs, ignominy, and a general sense of unfitness to my environment, and though it had in it horrid moments of pain, apprehension, and paralysing fear, I am quite sure that I was not continuously miserable or even depressed. The young have infinite powers of evasion; disposing Fate stands over and claims them—they are not the masters of it; but they often manage to dodge it, and belong again to themselves."

THE OLD SCHOOL TIE

The system of training and seeding has been modified from its monastic origins to meet the needs of rising mercantilism and imperialism. The selection is exclusive, dependent largely on birth or father's income, but those who undergo the training, however low their I.Q., have income and position for life. If government and finance do not provide, the church will.

The Very Rev. Philemon F. Sturges, dean of St. Paul's Cathedral, was reported in the Boston Transcript as saying, in speaking of the union of the American church with the Anglo-Catholic church in England, "The Anglican church enjoys an income of about fifteen and a half billion dollars a year from the vast properties acquired from the Church of Rome in the sixteenth century."

Quincy Howe assures us that "you do not have to have attended one of Britain's exclusive public schools to become a bishop, a member of the House of Lords, an admiral, a permanent under-secretary for foreign affairs, a governor of the Bank of England, or a prime minister." But today twenty-five of the fifty-eight ministers, and an even larger proportion of the foreign service, parliamentarians, bank directors, are Public School men. "One-third of all Cabinet Ministers in the last hundred years have come from either Eton or Harrow . . . twelve of the nineteen Prime Ministers during the same period". Eton alone claims one-sixth of all the present members of Parliament and ten of Britain's prime ministers.

This 'badge of the ruling class', 'the old school tie', that "proclaims that its wearer is not, thank God, as other men", is interestingly explained by Edward Acheson in "The Old School Tie", Esquire, April, 1937. He tells us that Stanley Baldwin, when called to form a Government, expressed the hope that his "should be a Government of which Harrow should not be ashamed", and called to his ministry six old Harrovian school-chums.

THE CASTE SYSTEM

Professor John Hilton of Cambridge University, England, in January, 1938, carried to Oxford his crusade inveighing against the caste system and the Public Schools. There he reported that 52 of 56 bishops, 19 of 24 deans, 122 of 156 county court judges and recorders, 152 of 210 civil servants paid more than £1000 annually, and 20 of 21 cabinet ministers are public school men. "To get a place in these 'reserved stalls'," he says, "you must have been at the right school and be entitled through life to wear the right school tie".

In Understanding the English, Whittlesey House, 1937, James Howard Wellard, who has lived in America long enough to understand his countrymen, attempts to explain to Americans the major mysteries of the "old school tie", but warns them that they "will find it difficult to envisage a state in which some 95 per cent of the population receive no formal education at all". The grammar schools of England which were copied in the American colonies, were innovations in response to the demand that Latin might be known to other than the priests. Later English grammar became of importance to the mercantile class that they might use their language to defend their prerogatives.

"Cobbett wrote in his letters on English grammar for a working boy: 'When you come to read the history of those laws of England by which the freedom of the people has been secured . . . you will find that tyranny has no enemy so formidable as the pen . . . ' Our educational system has ceased to be an instrument to assert the liberties of the country, or indeed to have any intelligible objective." ("Retreat from Reason").

But England still breeds men and produces educational innovations as in the time of Colet and Cobbett. Cecil Reddie at Abbotsholme and Badley at Bedales and Sanderson at Oundle are a few who carried on the true English tradition. The results of their work have spread to France, the Continent, America, and been a leaven to the world. But the stupid Public School boy still regards the English tradition as something dead, exemplified at its best by Cyril Norwood (cf. 14th ed. pp. 78, 80).

TRAINING TALKERS NOT THINKERS

In His Retreat From Reason, the Moncure Conway Lecture, Random House, 1938, Lancelot Hogben, one of the young intellectual giants that England still occasionally produces, virile biologist and mathematician of the London School of Economics, explains how blundering leaders have brought England to decadence.

"The educational system of Western civilization grew with no prescience of the gargantuan resources which natural science would place at our disposal for better or worse . . . The training of the statesmen and the man of letters gives him no provision of the technical forces which are shaping the society in which he lives. The machinery of educational selection operates to recruit the nation's statesman from those who can talk glibly, write elegantly and argue forcibly without the capacity to act competently . . . If democracy can produce only leaders who can talk it is doomed, and we can only hope to preserve it by a policy of educational selection which favours competence more than fluency."

Professor Hogben in his address before the British Institute of Adult Education in September, 1937, said, "The task of salvaging democracy is a positive one. We shall not resist the challenge of dictatorship and the downward path from militarism to barbarism if we are content to defend a democracy which had ceased to satisfy the social aspirations of men and women. The educational task of salvaging democracy is to canalise the will to constructive social innovation by asserting the reasonable grounds for hopefulness in the human experiment and to distribute knowledge which can be instrumental in the co-operative task of social reconstruction."

THE WRECKERS

Perhaps it is because of the 'old school tie' that it is the fate of the British Empire to be run by those whom it conquers, — Scotch, Welsh, Boers; that its royalty have been German since Queen Anne's time, so many of its statesmen Jews. All these escaped the Public School.

THE CREW THAT CONTROLS ENGLAND

"The system now in operation is not the capitalist system; it is a system of Government control of the business machine in all countries, a control for which Governments have had no training and of which they have had little or no understanding. Moreover, their mental equipment is totally unsuited for the constructive effort needed to cause the machine to operate freely and effectively."

The words are those of Sir George Paish, formerly adviser to the Chancellor of the Exchequer, in The Way Out, Ivor Nicholson and Watson, London, 1937. He is discussing "The Political and Economic Problems that Constitute a World Danger". By government, which he personifies, he means the Public School boys who are running it. He also knows that behind them, the puppets, are other forces.

Brooks Adams understood this. He and his brother knew England, when their father was American ambassador. In "The Degradation of the Democratic Dogma", 1919, he wrote, "Today Great Britain and America, like the parts of some gigantic saurian which has been severed in a prehistoric contest, seem half unconsciously to be trying to unite in an economic organism, perhaps to be controlled by a syndicate of bankers who will direct the movements of the putative governments of this enormous aggregation of vested interests independent of the popular will".

What was true then is even more true now. Paish tells us, "Every nation in the world is in fact pursuing a policy which if continued will amount to political and economic suicide . . . What the present situation demands is not so much physical courage, which the peoples possess in super-abundance, but moral courage, the courage to stand for what is just and generous and for the common good."

MORAL COURAGE LACKING

The ruling class in England is no longer what it once was. Taxation for war and socialistic sops to keep the people quiet has resulted in the depletion of resources of many an old family.

Their scions have gone to seed, or as chairmen of great corporations, it is their patriotic duty to uphold the diminishing income of their stock holders. But behind them are shrewder, more aggressive men, interested in 'chemicals' and 'heavy industry'. Of the seven billion now going into rearmament, they should get more than their usual twenty or thirty percent, for while Eden supplies the idealistic front, representatives of 'heavy industry' are in ultimate control.

Moral courage is lacking. Labor is leaderless. The British parliamentary investigation of war profits was safely side-tracked. Popular demand had been incited by Senator Nye's investigation in America. But that, too, was stopped by a word from the British bureaucrats through President Roosevelt, just as it was about to disclose that international banker control which Brooks Adams had denounced.

DESPERATE INCOMPETENCE

The operating crew, the 'Coalition Government', in August 1935, were in a desperate way, on their last legs. Twelve million people had just voted for peace and the 'League'. The time for a general election approached. 'Labor' confidently expected to come in. A sudden call for a cabinet meeting about the middle of August brought members back from distant vacationing. From the meeting Ramsay MacDonald emerged, announcing, as though he were letting the cat out of the bag more or less purposely, that the decisions made had been the most momentous since the Great War.

What had happened was that some of the 'bright boys' had devised and put across a plan by which the government could perpetuate itself, a plan whereby a rearmament program could be sold to the people that would keep 'heavy industries' prosperous and yield large profits to those in control. Censorship was clamped down on the press, and before the English people were permitted to know, their fleet was in the Mediterranean. Italy was being stirred to whip up enthusiasm for rearmament.

If England had closed the Suez Canal, free men might have triumphed in Ethiopia. Spain would have settled her own difficulties. Japan might not have been so cocky.

When the English people had been stirred to war intensity of enthusiasm in support of the League, a general election was sprung upon them. The 'crew' received a new lease of life. The rearmament program was announced. The directors of the 'heavy industries' had done their duty to their stock holders. Huge profits were assured. The Labor Party which had been so confident of triumph, had been skillfully fooled and was confused and helpless. The Public School boys, educated for the purpose had 'saved England'.

FATAL LOYALTY

The 'old school tie' still holds, among the 'civil servants' of India. Oblivious to the superiority of the Indian, esthetically and spiritually, subconsciously sadistic because of his education, proud that he could 'take the cane', the Public School boy, with a sense of righteousness, flogs, tortures and degrades what he calls 'natives', whose ancestors were cultivated men when his own were what he would now consider crude barbarians. The punitive expeditions he organizes against the freedom loving hill men of the border follow, too, the pattern of the school master in purpose and righteousness.

In India for two generations the saying has been current among those who know,—"India was conquered by the Irish, is administered by the British for the benefit of the Scotch". The fighting quality of the Irish and the loyalty of the English 'civil servants' made it possible for the shrewd Scotch to control the companies that in their hey-day paid big dividends. Since then the Armenian, the Greek, the Jew, the Parsee, and the Hindu himself have reduced British dividends. Once the camel gets its head inside the tent . . .

There is nothing new about this method. When the boys who wear the 'old school tie' act together as they do under orders from above, the Constitution may be set aside. Major Gen. J. E. B. Seely, soldier, statesman and sportsman who served in the Boer War, House of Commons, as Secretary of State had more to do with organizing England for the Great War than any other one man. In his autobiography "Adventure" he tells us "how for an hour in 1914 the British Constitution was suspended while millions were provided for the 'Intelligence Service' that brought England and her allies into the War. But Seely is strong in denouncing the famed 'hardening system' of producing English gentlemen. He sees it as subtle source of weakness rather than as the key to British imperial success as it is ordinarily held to be. England and her colonies are strewn with psychopathic wrecks in high places who were created in the English public schools by flogging methods." (cf. 15th ed. pp, 91, 92).

PSYCHIATRY OF THE RACE

"Man began by usurping the rank of lord of creation. Galileo and Newton succeeded in deposing him, much against his will,—as the Church very candidly confessed,—but he has never despaired of reinstating himself by means of his Reason." (Henry Adams, "Degradation of the Democratic Dogma").

THE HUMAN INFERIORITY COMPLEX

Walt Whitman's proud boast that he, like the beasts of the field, had serenity and contentment, was mere camouflage.

"Much of the modern world's despair springs from a belief that man ought to be an angel and therefore must be treated as a rat because he isn't . . . If there has been a time when life was other than precarious or when mankind was immune from danger, agony, cruelty, or disaster, it must be sought in pre-history only," Bernard De Voto writes in the Saturday Review of Literature, October 23, 1937.

"From the time when one of the earliest Adams shivered in fear before the threatening forces of nature and compared his puniness with the incalculable power of the universe, man has been 'aware of his relative helplessness in the hands of natural forces. Having reconciled himself to this with the aid of various devices . . . he encounters the same discomforts in comparing himself with individual men, stronger, quicker, or more astute than himself.'" (Menninger, "The Human Mind").

THE SPLIT CONSCIOUSNESS

Of that golden age of mankind which De Voto like millions before him have longed for, glimmerings have come to us from the East. Under Asoka there was a period of hundreds of years of peace, actual, not armed peace like the Pax Romana. The Indus civilization reveals a people of six thousand years ago, advanced in art and hygiene, living in great cities without defense or weapons.

Gerald Heard sees in these Indian survivals evidence of a proto-civilization when the mind of man was whole and sane. With the development of agriculture and land values came governments and wars and so developed the concept of sin, the consciousness of guilt, the 'split consciousness', and our longings for the lost paradise, our glimmering hopes for a return, which Gerald Heard elaborates in "The Source of Civilization", Harpers, 1937, (cf. 20th ed. pp. 151, 152).

But anthropologists find evidence of conflict and lack of adjustment even among primitive tribes. There is evidence, too, that before man had acquired the use of language, there were internal tensions and stresses, a basic lack of coordination that resulted in behavior disorders, individual and social.

HUMAN CONFLICT

Such imbalance due to conflict of internal motives of man as a species, Dr. Trigant Burrow explores in The Biology of Human Conflict: An Anatomy of Behavior Individual and Social, Macmillan, 1937. He is a psychopathologist who has devoted his life and thought to behavior disorders. He has organized a group of patients, pupils, and disciples, known as the Lifwynn Foundation. They study their own behavior disorders and incentives as normal or neurotic persons in order to develop a technique which offers hope of repair. Objective observations of neuromuscular functions lead to understanding of subjective processes.

The "underlying causal factors in behavior-disorders" are "envisaged by phylobiology". This pertains "to man's reactions as a phylum as they mediate his bionomic rapport with his social and material environment". "Bionomic" has to do "with the relation between organism and environment".

His inferences as to causes far back in the phylum are drawn from the study of the persons before him. He remains a psychobiologist, dealing wholly with the specimens in his laboratory, but arrives by this original method at results which have been reached by anthropologists studying a wider range of material.

Crime, like insanity, is due to lack of adjustment in the individual but implicates the phylum, the race, society. No community will be competent to cope with insanity or crime, to reduce the maladjustment, until it has recognized the conflict and imbalance intrinsic in the social structure.

Unbalanced behavior he says has a symptom of a pathological process within the racial organism and within that of the individual. This pathological process results from a conflict between two systems of response, one measured only by the organism's need, the other which reacts to external environment through the symbol—the spoken or written word. The first is inherited, the second acquired.

The major difficulties with the individual, as with groups, are conflicts of words and ideas in which the outlook is distorted. He makes a great deal of language, as do the semanticists. This brings Burrow close to Korzybski's attitude:

"The old animalistic, fallacious generalizations have been, and are, the foundation of our 'philosophies', 'ethics', systems, and naturally such animalistic doctrines must be disastrous to us. Neurologically, we build up conditions which our nervous systems cannot stand; and so we break down, and perhaps, shall not even survive."

PSYCHIATRY OF THE INDIVIDUAL

"The chauvinistic Armistice Day ceremony at Whitehall's Cenotaph" was interrupted by a cry, "Stop all this hypocrisy!" While the king stood stolid, the "madman" piled on by the police was hustled to the insane asylum. A letter writer to Time protests, "Hypocrisy! The inanities in the world taking place in the name of 'patriotism' are enough to make any sane, intelligent person 'wild-eyed' . . . Perhaps he was the only rational person there!" Time annotates, "Possibly but not probably.—Ed."

AGE OF SCHIZOPHRENIA

Peer Gynt, visiting an asylum in Egypt, set all the lunatics loose and locked up the keepers, we are reminded by the editors of Harper's, in the December, 1937, issue of which appears "The Age of Schizophrenia". This is the concluding chapter of a book by Leslie C. Barber. 'Illinus', salesman, reporter, soldier, farmer, he writes from the standpoint of the patient, now loose.

This schizophrenia is a "splitting apart of the emotional from the intellectual life", due to the difficulty of adjustment to change. "Thus as the years go by, most men and women become more or less afflicted with schizophrenia. Their minds grow without friction or serious effort, while their emotional development is retarded by the hard labor of adjustment. . . . They wind up in the half-hearted compromise between Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde. . .

"The place to begin any social development is with the children. It is easier to avoid schizophrenia than to cure it. Our growing citizens may fairly demand this of us because they will have need of their best energies if they are ever to bring order out of the state of affairs we are bequeathing to them. Let us, to the best of our uncertain knowledge and ability, avoid afflicting them with habit patterns which they will some day have to change."

ADJUSTMENT DIFFICULTIES IN GROWING UP

The child "is likely to discover that certain social habits of his group are an insult to his intelligence. These are hang-overs from the past. He learns that there are some questions which may be asked and some which may not. His established habit patterns are challenged at home and abroad. The painful process of growing up is in full swing.

"School brings a new set of acquaintances and more taboos.

He must accommodate himself to the teacher's way of doing things. Surrounded on all sides by unreasoned anachronisms, he successfully evades some of them only to discover that he has a conscience. For the rest of his unnatural life he is at war on two fronts—with society and with himself.

"The coming of puberty, with its new and violent strains and stresses, finds him facing a new and still more severe set of taboos. His entrance into college or into the working world brings a new complement of regulations to which his habits must be made to conform. Marriage brings still another, and the births of his children (who promptly relegate him to second place in the household) demand one more series of adjustments.

"Small wonder that by the time the average man has reached middle age he is tired of the endless process of taking himself to pieces, and becomes a conservative in a futile effort to avoid further change. It is quite logical that after seventy he should become a downright reactionary."

Dr. John Y. Dent in "The Human Machine" (cf. 21st ed. p. 119), sums this all up briefly. "Instead of childhood being as it should be, a preparation for adulthood, it is almost always in the Atlantic civilizations a period of preventive detention under more or less monastic conditions of sexual segregation." The sudden transitions in adjustment in the development of our young from "school to university", from "virginity to marriage", often produce maladjustments.

EDUCATION IS ADJUSTMENT

"The psychiatrist does not deny the value of facts learned in school, but he believes that the facts can be useful to the individual only if proper adjustment is made to life. He considers that the first purpose of education in its broader sense is the facilitation of adjustment to reality, and if this is not attained, facts, doctrines, systems, and philosophies can be of little value." This is quoted from the chapter "Applications" in Karl Menninger's "The Human Mind".

"Furthermore, he believes that the child's education begins with the first day of life and that the most important period from the educator's standpoint is the early years before the child enters school. The parents are the child's earliest educators, and the teacher is not dealing with untouched material, but with an individual whose personality is already well determined . . .

"And psychiatry . . . is comparatively unknown in educational circles. True, of late there has been considerable demand in parent-teacher groups and in teachers' associations for information on mental hygiene, but usually it has been included as a kind of side line."

THE DISCOVERY OF MIND

Mind and soul have mystified men for ages. How Schmidt in his "Dawn of The Human Mind" discloses the origin, nature and the development of the soul through the last hundred thousand years was recounted in the last edition of this HANDBOOK (pp. 105-109). Those 'possessed of devils' have helped us to discover and understand the human mind. Clifford Beers, who a quarter of a century ago emerged from an asylum to found the whole mental hygiene movement, has lived to reap his reward.

THE FOUNDER OF PSYCHOPATHOLOGY

Elmer Southard, the founder of psychopathology, after service in the war, died of blood poisoning from a prick on the finger, removing a brain in an autopsy. He came to Harvard in the fall of 1894, intent on becoming a doctor. His facile, searching mind carried him from biology into metaphysical and philosophic courses, and led him in his discussions and bull sessions into much argumentative exercise, although his mind was good enough to reveal to him a certain futility in all this.

Similarly in the Medical School, his intellectual aliveness and curiosity led him to roam outside the normal field of studies. He became interested in mental abnormalities. The war gave him opportunity to enlarge his experience, and on his return he was influential in founding the first psychopathic hospital in this country. Professor Frederick P. Gay of Columbia, who was Southard's close friend for thirty years, has written a biography, still in manuscript.

Among Southard's pupils at the Harvard Medical School was Karl A. Menninger, who writes, "The greatest genius of all, the man who in my opinion is more than any other one responsible for the extension of psychiatry from the laboratory and the asylum to the fireside and the market-place was Elmer Ernest Southard".

"Southard was his favorite professor and influenced his work tremendously," Karl's father writes me. "As you may know, Southard suggested the founding of our school, and it was for him that Karl named it. Southard seems to have had the gift of inspiring his pupils to attempt great tasks. We have always thought that if he had not died so young he would have been considered one of the greatest psychiatrists in this country."

CASTING OUT DEVILS

The Human Mind, Knopf, 1937, by Karl A. Menninger, was inspired by Southard. "He told me to write it, just before he died, ten years ago, when I was one of his many disciples." It is wholly rewritten from the first edition of 1930 and incorporates the best thought of the leaders in psychiatry,—Adolf Meyer, Frankwood Williams, and Menninger's own father. It is interestingly written not only for the young psychiatrist but for the layman and the teacher. These excerpts illustrate the straightforward sincerity.

"The Evolution of the Devil" is the story of mental hygiene. "Possessed of devils" was the explanation two thousand years ago,—"bewitched" by those who "had sold themselves to Satan" even as late as colonial New England. "Original sin" was the explanation of our grandfathers, "pure cussedness" of our fathers. "Feeble-mindedness" then became the explanation for "bed-wetting to bootlegging". "Insanity", the psychiatrist harped, "Hereditry", the eugenists said, "human nature", the philosophers.

"There is no such thing as human nature", says Menninger. "Always human misbehavior was explained on the assumption that something from the outside world got into the inside of a hapless soul and made him do and feel as he shouldn't do and feel". And so we get to calling names. "Common sense" prescribed as treatment "did not avert these tragedies".

Rid of preconceptions and prejudices, Dr. Menninger takes us to scientific observation of "Personalities", "Symptoms", "Motives", "Treatments", and "Applications". "Mental health" is "the adjustment of human beings to the world and to each other with a maximum of effectiveness and happiness".

A FAMILY OF PSYCHIATRISTS

The father, Charles F. Menninger, is president of the Menninger Clinic and the Menninger Sanitarium Corporation, which he and his son Karl organized in 1925, and medical director of the Southard School for Unadjusted Children, which is associated with the Menninger Clinic and Sanitarium.

At seventy-five he discovers this Handbook, reads the introduction, and writes us: "I have just . . . taken the occasion to read the entire editorial preface of your last handbook. I was so enthusiastic about your ideas on education . . . that I wish to write you. You mention the fact that there is a vast gulf lying between the mental content and vision of the scientist and of the educator. This point of view in a handbook for parents or teachers is decidedly revolutionary . . ."

William C. Menninger, the younger son, at the age of 39 is medical director of the Menninger Sanitarium, and has contributed a very large number of articles on psychiatric and neurological subjects to medical literature.

Karl A. Menninger, the older son, born in 1893, returned to Topeka from Harvard to develop a neuropsychiatric clinical center and is now associated with his father and brother and ten other physicians in the Menninger Clinic, of which he is Chief-of-Staff. For fifteen years he has been professor of mental hygiene and abnormal psychology and criminology at Washburn College in Topeka. He organized, and is a member of the board of directors of, the Kansas State Mental Hygiene Society.

"EACH MAN KILLS THE THING HE LOVES"

Karl A. Menninger's Man Against Himself, Harcourt, Brace, 1938, is a brilliant study of suicide and related phenomena. The author starts with Freud's "death instinct" which parallels the will to live. The theme Oscar Wilde summed up in a single great line, "Each man kills the thing he loves", though Menninger doesn't quote this. He puts it, "In the end each man kills himself in his own selected way, fast or slow, soon or late".

Self-destruction is often the result of unsatisfied desire for aggression against someone else. This may appear in the Japanese hari kiri or the Malay running amok. Menninger's cases are almost wholly American, mostly from the heart of the continent. This first book in its field opens up great possibilities for further studies among other peoples. It is equally valuable for those who do not accept as a basic factor Freud's "death instinct".

Under "Chronic Suicide" he treats asceticism, martyrdom, neurotic invalidism, alcoholism. Under "Focal Suicide" he deals with self-mutilations, purposive accidents, impotence and frigidity. And under "Organic Suicide" he deals with hysteria, emotional stresses, hates, eroticism.

THE MENTALLY ILL

"One out of every nineteen children born during the three year period from 1929-31 eventually will become incapacitated by mental disease to a degree requiring admission to an institution. An increase of 15 percent is expected over the 1919-21 ratio of one person in twenty-two," the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company predicts in a recent bulletin on the basis of its own computations.

The 500,000 mental patients in the United States in hospitals, and probably as many outside, require the services of 3600 nurses and 3000 psychiatrists, Life reports, March 14, 1938, in a nine page illustrated article depicting the life in one institution.

Considerate treatment of the mentally ill dates from Clifford Beers' "A Mind That Found Itself", published twenty-five years ago. He was the first to be cured of what we then called insanity without having his inferiority complex so enlarged that he could never tell the story. William Seabrook and Henry Collins Brown, two literary men who have recovered after treatment, each this year published the story of his experience.

Another group of recent books deals with the history of treatment, Albert Deutsch's The Mentally Ill in America, Doubleday, Doran, 1937, and Walter Bromberg's The Mind of Man: The Story of Man's Conquest of Mental Illness, Harper, 1937, from the time of prehistoric man, who on five continents trepanned skulls to let the evil spirit escape.

MENTAL HEALTH OR FAILURE

The function of the mind is explained in "The Way of All Flesh" by Samuel Butler. "All our lives long, every day and every hour, we are engaged in the process of accommodating our changed and unchanged selves to changed and unchanged surroundings; living, in fact, is nothing else than this process of accommodation; when we fail in it a little we are stupid, when we fail flagrantly we are mad . . . A life will be successful or not, according as the power of accommodation is equal to or unequal to the strain of fusing and adjusting internal and external changes."

What a college education does is revealed in a report on "Psychiatry in College", Mental Hygiene, July, 1932, by Anderson and Kennedy, to which Menninger refers in "The Human Mind". "Out of 442 college men and women applying to Macy's during the spring of 1931, approximately 15 per cent were accepted for employment and only 4 per cent were accepted for the training squad . . . 85 to 90 per cent of applicants from the colleges are rejected . . . for any job . . . 95 to 99 per cent fail to be selected as potential executive material. Why? Because of the lack of one or more of the following characteristics: alertness, intelligence, good physical health, reserve energy, purposiveness, shrewdness, adaptability, good insight, good sense of reality, well-defined interests, and evidences of achievement."

"Man refuses to be degraded in self-esteem, of which he has never had enough to save him from bitter self-reproaches. He yearns for flattery and he needs it," wrote Henry Adams. "What mankind will do for itself" worried him. "Possibly the Universities may think it safer to ignore the dilemma for another decade or two, as they have ignored so many others."

Our universities and schools, too, are filled with incipient mental hygiene cases. Our educational institutions are swelling the parade from 'schoolhouse to bughouse'. Conflicts, frustrations, semantic difficulties, could easily be overcome or removed but it is still respectable in the universities to think of mind as an entity, not something that can be deranged like the digestion or any other function.

Our educators have yet to discover the mind.

THE HERITAGE OF IGNORANCE

Education must first "dispel the 'knowing so many things that ain't so' ". Ours is "a gigantic heritage of ignorance—a heritage held so jealously in trust that it did not begin to totter until psycho-pathology entered upon 'the morning of its medical life' in our own days . . . Then, if this task be successfully completed, we embark upon the relatively simple business of imparting the new information."

"THINGS THAT AIN'T SO"

The Russian Gregory Zilboorg, graduate of Petrograd and Columbia, and now a practising New York psychiatrist, tells us this in "The Heritage of Ignorance", Atlantic, June, 1937. The 'things that ain't so' are persistent, sometimes difficult to dispel, as history shows. Aristarchus of Samos, 250 B. C., anticipated the discovery of Copernicus, that the solar system was not geocentric. Eighteen centuries later Copernicus was denounced as a criminal, and Bruno was burned for announcing this heliocentric truth. And Galileo, obliged by the inquisition to recant and make a "weekly recitation of the seven penitential psalms for a period of three years", died with his great work unpublished for another 180 years.

But Galileo got a laugh out of his persecutions, at the expense of the professors of Padua. Zilboorg quotes Professor A. Wolf's translation of his letter to the German astronomer Kepler: "I wish, my dear Kepler, that we could have a good laugh together at the extraordinary stupidity of the mob. What do you think of the foremost philosophers of this University? In spite of my oft-repeated efforts and invitations, they have refused, with the obstinacy of a gluttoned adder, to look at the planets or the moon, or my glass! Why must I wait so long before I can laugh with you? Kindest Kepler, what peals of laughter you would give forth, if you heard with what arguments the foremost philosopher of the University opposed me, in the presence of the Grand Duke, at Pisa, laboring with logic-chopping argumentations as though they were magical incantations wherewith to banish or spirit away the new planets (the satellites of Jupiter) out of the sky."

Paracelsus at the beginning of the 16th century "contended that certain mental diseases in children or adults are due to the unconscious activity of the imaginative faculty." Two centuries later Freud's reannouncement of this discovery was and is still greeted with incredulity by those who should know.

DEFENSE OF IGNORANCE

Man usually welcomes new things which are supposedly practical and useful,—new tools, new gadgets, every patent medicine ‘to poison out disease as we smoke out vermin’ (O. W. Holmes). It is in the trivial that he seeks the new and the novel. On important things he holds to the ancient fundamentals, where he lets principles bar his way, laws, traditions, mores, tabus fetter him. He is always ready to logically defend his ignorance of things that are of permanent and far reaching significance.

Ignorance exercises “an automatic, invisible, effective censorship over man’s thought and activities”. The why’s are many. Let’s study the causes that have “‘dampt the glory of human wits’ and led humanity to defend its ignorance with a vehemence far greater than that with which it has ever fought for genuine knowledge.”

PROJECTIONS AND DISPLACEMENTS

“Man projects not only his apprehensions but also his aspirations.” Paranoia is a mental projection outward, of fear, hatred, hostility, which seeks to fasten the hatred or hostility on some imagined persecutor. “Idealizations, belief in immortality, faith in a better future are all magnificent or tragic offsprings of the primitive mentality which utilizes the mechanism of projection.” It is the same “mechanism which leads the individual to become a Napoleon or a chronic dementia praecox”.

“These displacements and projections weave themselves into endless postulates and opinions. They are man’s own inventions . . . fantasies coming from the unconscious emotions. . . These fantasies color, influence, and frequently dominate and control the intellect whose supposed function is to control them.

“Thus ‘knowledge of so many things that ain’t so’ is born, nurtured, developed, and clung to with all the tenacity which is characteristic of a biological need. . . . That is why matters psychological have been bound up throughout the history of humanity with magic, revelation, religion, and speculative philosophy. . . .

“It is one of man’s propensities to look outward for the causes of his own weakness. . . . Real knowledge begins only with man’s realization of his own imperfection. Instead of realizing it, man projected his fantasy of perfection into the universe and found himself laboring under the concept of preestablished harmony. . . .

“Man is chiefly interested in scientific investigation of material nature, since this helps him not only to gratify his curiosity but—and this primarily—to gratify through the outside world his own fantasy of and aspiration for mastery and omnipotence." As Voltaire remarked, "If it is true that the Lord created man in His own image, man returned the compliment".

THE PROBLEM OF THE SOUL

Today we are "puzzled as we were in the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries . . . by the problem of the soul." John Locke sought to penetrate the mystery. But the scientist, warned off, has been obliged to confine himself to the more obviously physical realms.

"We seem to shy off looking directly at the psychic reactions of man. . . In this almost universal trend it is not difficult to detect an old, essential prejudice", which "makes the development of modern medical psychology so difficult and arouses so many passions where psychological or psychiatric problems are involved. . . . Everyone looks everywhere—into the stomach, the brain, the glands—except into the human mind (the psyche) for a solution to his various problems." If a man is sad, they say it's "black bile", melancholia, take a pill.

The soul is perfect, immortal, hence invulnerable, inviolable, it can't be sick. 'Mens sana in corpore sano' is still quoted by educators and in school catalogs as the complete prescription. Our soul, or psychological problems are turned over to the priest, the philosopher, the charlatan. Kant believed that mental disease was a matter for philosophers.

It is as difficult for us to recognize that what we call the human psyche is a natural phenomenon which can be subjected to analysis and biological understanding, as it was for Galileo's peers to admit that the earth went round the sun.

"What we call the human mind is merely a biological characteristic of the Homo sapiens . . . subject of a number of natural laws rather than master of these. What we call mind is not our intellect alone, but all our feelings, conscious and unconscious, all the inner drives which guide our thinking."

THE UNIVERSAL DIGESTION

"The scientific value of understanding human beings helps us to rid ourselves of the assumption that the human psyche is more perfect than the human body."

Our mental mechanisms are quite as subject to derangement as our digestive. Our digestion is no more an entity than is our mind. We might theorize and build a metaphysics about the universal and eternal digestion, and it would be more logical and hold together better than any of the metaphysics on the universal soul or mind: Everything is in time digested, resolved into its elements and assimilated in new ways to build new units. That's good physics, demonstrable in the laboratory.

PHYSICAL MALADJUSTMENT

Even if we had no mentality, no brains, even if we followed James Thurber's advice, Let Your Mind Alone, Harper, 1937, or refused to share Wolcott Gibbs' Bed of Neuroses, Dodd, Mead, 1937, we would still have our troubles.

LEARNING TO WALK

The fall of man seems to mean something. The nightmare of falling is common to all children and one may observe the same thing in young monkeys. At most, it is less than a million years that we have habitually stood up on our hind legs. Anatomists dwell on the maladjustment of our internal organs to the vertical position, the consequent ills necessitating the use of correctives, —brassieres, corsets, abdominal belts, trusses, pessaries, braces, arch supports.

Most of us learn to walk without help or instruction. Few of us have acquired the art of standing or walking with ease or grace. Some finishing schools train girls how to get into a room and out. The first thing done with a raw recruit is to show him how to stand up on his hind legs.

FIGHTING GRAVITY

Our ancestors developed a nervous muscularity in their spasmodic jumping and grasping necessary to life in the tree tops. We have not yet become accustomed to living on the surface of old mother earth. Still in our puny nervous way we are fighting the force of gravity.

Gerald Stanley Lee, of the Coordination Guild, Northampton, Mass., through long continued, patient study has discovered how much this matter of balance means to us, how unaccustomed we are in our present erect posture to adjusting ourselves to the pull of gravity. He has made us aware of what gravity may do for us if we only recognize and use it. The elephant moves his seven tons of weight without fighting gravity. Watch movies of an elephant and you see that all his motions are graceful, due to yielding to gravity. One forefoot is lifted and he falls in that direction. The hind foot is dragged forward and is placed.

Mr. Lee demonstrates a method of utilizing unconsciously the force of gravity to do our muscular work for us, which results in grace, poise, balance, and avoids wasted nervous and muscular energy. His ideas have been set forth in his books "Rest Working" and "Heathen Rage".

OFF BALANCE

In Ju-jitsu the Japanese have developed a system of defense based on the ease with which an opponent can be thrown off balance. The two Japanese words signify submission and science. It has been slow to develop in popularity in this country. Recently a new manual, The Art of Ju-Jitsu, David McKay Company, 1937, has been produced by E. J. Harrison, a pupil of Yokio Tani.

The origins of this ancient art, like most things Japanese, are Chinese. In Japan many schools have been developed. One great teacher, Jigoro Kano, at the Kodokwan in Tokyo, has combined the best of all the methods. This he calls Ju-do which means submission way. Both terms signify that it is not strength, but skill in taking your opponent when he is off balance, that wins.

THE THINKING BODY

The Thinking Body: A Study of the Balancing Forces of Dynamic Man, by Mabel Elsworth Todd, Paul B. Hoeber, Inc., Medical Book Department of Harpers, 1937, apes in its title Walter Cannon's "The Wisdom of the Body", but is not so apt, for thinking is active and specific, while wisdom is something that has been arrived at through long doing. Miss Todd has been doing useful work in helping people to adjust themselves physically, particularly in problems of posture and locomotion. Her book approaches the subject from the empirical side and is in the nature of a compilation of notes. A bibliography shows range of reading, but much as she knows she does not know enough. The subject, a difficult one, requires a master mind to relate what she and others have done. But her courage, her effort, and her achievement should be applauded.

YOGA

Aldous Huxley in "Ends and Means" leans toward Yoga, perhaps from his close association with Gerald Heard, who in his "Source of Civilization" tells us, "It was not possible, until we in Europe became interested in psychology and realized the critical importance of the subconscious, for Yoga even to be inquired into seriously".

The journalist Paul Brunton has gone far in his "A Search in Secret India" (cf. 20th ed., pp. 149, 150) to explore and understand the mystic teachings and practices of Yoga, a system of physical training which has always been surrounded by a halo of mysticism. Brunton asserts, "It can bring our bodies nearer the healthy condition which Nature intended" and bestow "a flawless serenity of mind."

In his "Lives of a Bengal Lancer" and now in Yoga Explained, Viking Press, 1937, Major Francis Yeats-Brown shows how much of the physical and breathing exercises are adaptable for the use of Westerns and for their benefit. Photographs show that he has attained a considerable skill.

A native of Travancore, South India, graduate of the University of Calcutta, a student at Yale in the department of psychology, returned to India, submitted to Yoga discipline under great teachers, became accomplished in it, and then returned to Yale for two years of additional study and research. In Yoga: A Scientific Evaluation, Macmillan, 1937, Kovoort T. Behanan gives a sympathetic presentation and appraisal, without championing it as a system of philosophy.

He shows how Yoga has much in common with psychoanalysis and psychic research. A chapter on the physical training gives illustrations of posture, breathing, exercises in concentration. Some account is given of the scientific tests which were made on his breathing and metabolism in the Yale psychological laboratories during and after these Yoga exercises.

THERE'S SOMETHING IN IT

While we considered mind and soul separate entities it was difficult to understand how the physical control of musculature, breathing, circulation and glands could affect mind and soul. So we Westerners set down Yoga and much of this 'wisdom of the East' as fake. But Western laboratory science has arrived at a stage where it can now understand and interpret how modification of our organic functions may affect mind and soul. F. Matthias Alexander unconsciously sensed and expounded something of this in his books which we have reviewed in earlier editions, "Man's Supreme Inheritance", 1918, "Constructive Conscious Control of the Individual", 1924. In his school at Bexley, Kent, is taught control of the physiological, the endocrine as well as the muscular. Aldous Huxley in his last book has just discovered Alexander as he has Yoga.

Younghusband, Yeats-Brown, Brunton, Carrel, Heard, and now Huxley, have come to a point where they can begin to synthesize somewhat fuzzily, still in a fog of mysticism. "There are more things in Heaven and earth" than Horatio had dreamt of in his philosophy, and on the fringe of knowledge where the charlatans gather there are glimmerings of understandings and interpretations yet to be made that will harmonize and make meaningful much that has been mystic.

SOCIAL MALADJUSTMENT

If you have been off by yourself in the wilds, living a primitive life, independent of others, it takes a little readjustment when you get back to conform to the conventions. There are few of us who at times don't want to be alone, to go back and sit down and grouch or weep by ourselves.

"Mrs. Martin Johnson is going back to the jungle. Not for her the perils of civilization", we read in the newspapers. But she will come back. The solitude-loving social human can't long remain solitary. Solitude's the worst torture that can be inflicted on the recalcitrant prisoner. We are social animals, but we are new at the game and we have difficulty in getting on with our fellows. Any deb can tell you that society offers difficulties.

SOCIAL BEGINNINGS

The original state of man, solitary or social, is one on which anthropologists express differing opinions. Alfred Machin says man was solitary. Sir Arthur Keith, in his foreword to Machin's book, takes issue, as anthropoid apes live in families or bands.

But these apes were not our earliest ancestors and the story is more complicated. The earliest mammals, insectivorous animals, were both solitary and nocturnal, to escape their enemies and to take their sun loving insect prey when, lacking the warmth of the sun, the latter were less active.

Their omnivorous remote descendants, the monkeys, found survival value in living in troops. Two heads were better than one, twenty pairs of eyes and ears better than one pair. And this held for the baboons and the smaller apes on the ground. The huge and powerful gorilla, confident in strength, could live an isolated family existence. So perhaps did our immediate human ancestors.

When man became a hunter of the gregarious herbivorous animals, there was an advantage in uniting in drives and later, as he domesticated these animals, in handling the herds. Agricultural man, too, found advantages in living together for defense against wild beasts and marauding tribes.

The earliest traces of village groups in the Swiss lakes and in the fens of Somerset are probably much less than ten thousand years old. We have lived a social life for only a short time. Before that for hundreds of thousands of years we lived as individuals or in family groups, for some million years earlier as troops of tree living animals. But if we go back beyond a hundred million years, we will find our ancestors solitary, notturnal. So it is from a long mixed heritage that we derive our conflicting complexes, both solitary and social.

NO PERFECT HUMAN SOCIETY

Men have not yet had time to become adjusted to social life, to living together, to modern conditions. The sadistic virtues of the hunter are inimical to life in our increasingly complex social groups.

A living species, plant or animal, adjusts itself to its environment, only those individuals surviving who fit the changing situation. Societies, groups, cultures undergo the same survival tests but are slower to change.

Social maladjustment results from changes in the environment. Physical changes may result in emigration but new human factors may be introduced by immigration. Adjustment is not a matter of free will or effort but is something that is inevitable and continuously going on.

Methods of getting food or overcoming competitors may lose their survival value under changing conditions. Those who do not change their methods, who do not adjust themselves, do not survive. The rocks are full of encrusted conservatives, former stand-patters who could not make good, and there are living fossils today.

No human society has endured. That of ancient Egypt and the present Chinese civilization have been the longest lived. The ancient Egyptian lived in the Nile valley under unchanging physical conditions. The Chinese people are notoriously adaptable.

THE SCIENCE OF SOCIAL ADJUSTMENT

Our study of societies is very recent and incomplete. Eventually there may be a real science of sociology, but the study bristles with semantic difficulties.

"Social Psychology may be defined as a study of the behavior (or awareness) of individuals in their reactions to other individuals or in social institutions, and the behaviors through which individuals stimulate one another in such situations." (Social Forces, May, 1937). This is the definition adopted by The American Psychological Association at their meeting in Hanover, N. H., September, 1936. It is broad enough to include not only the American people but the white ant.

The Science of Social Adjustment, Macmillan, 1937, by Sir Josiah Stamp, is four addresses "which the times so urgently demand if we are to stave off Emerson's verdict: 'The end of the human race will be that it will eventually die of civilisation'."

Quoting Norman Wilson's "Expected Population Changes and their Effect upon Social Services", he points out that while the total population is altered slowly, in parts and relatively, changes may be rapid. "Thus, in England and Wales, 40.4 millions in 1937 becomes . . . 37.5 in 1962. But the children aged sixteen years . . . have been estimated, taking those in 1937 as 100, to be . . . 62 in 1962 . . . On the other hand, the older people from sixty-five to seventy-four years will increase" in the ratio of 100 to 133.

With a decline of 8 percent in the population, the proportion of old people over 65 in 1962 to those under 16 will be twice what it is today. That is, in 25 years a decline of only 8 percent in the population will result in the proportion of those over 65 to those under 16 being doubled. In 25 years there will be half as many children, twice as many old men, "less laughter, more groans", as forecasted in this Handbook four years ago.

But all this can be changed. We have the knowledge, the brains, the resources. All we need is to become aware.

A NEWT UTOPIA

The danger of mediocrity, of leveling down, the de-grading processes of our civilization, are satirized in Karel Capek's War With The Newts, Putnam, 1937. Capek is more humorous, less cynical than Anatole France in "Penguin Island". In his newt-man world, mediocrity has become a cult. To feed the hungry that they may multiply is the chief end. These newt men are great salamanders. They walk upright and swim under the sea. They breed rapidly. They have learned to use explosives with which they gradually undermine and destroy the continents where the humans who feed them live. Food, mere multiplication in contrast to higher types, brains,—those are the points of the satire.

OTHER SOCIETIES THAN OURS

Both animals and plants living together in groups derive mutual benefits which give them greater survival value. This communistic living of plants and animals is called ecology. Sponges, corals, fans, as well as bees and beavers and scores of other diverse groups, were completely socialized before man appeared.

It is little wonder that other societies than ours are more perfectly adjusted to their environment. They have had a longer time to perfect their communistic living. But who wants to be a white ant.

THIS INSECT'S WORLD

Man proudly boasts that this is "his world", this the "age of man". In his entertaining recent survey of invertebrate societies "Evolution and Behavior of the Invertebrates", Chapter VII of The World and Man: As Science Sees Them, W. C. Allee, professor of zoology at the University of Chicago, rebukes man for his anthropocentric boast.

There are more than 600,000 named species of animals, perhaps as many more unnamed. Stretch out your arms from tip to tip, six feet. The first joint of a finger represents proportionately the number of species of mammals, the second joint birds, reptiles and amphibians, the basal joint and the palm the fishes. The one hand represents all the vertebrates,—the rest of the arm, body and other arm, all the invertebrates. And the number of species in each group corresponds roughly to the length of time the group has existed.

But the insects comprise not only the greatest number of species, but are overwhelming in their numbers. They actually dominate and prevent the existence of man over a considerable portion of the earth's surface. The world is theirs and the fulness thereof, except in the temperate regions and in a few places like the Canal Zone where at great expense man has reduced the number of some one species of insect, like the Malarial Anopheles.

An intimate view of insect life near at hand, with 130 photographs by the author, is Edwin Way Teale's Grassroot Jungles, Dodd, Mead, 1937. He tells us, "Nine-tenths of all the living creatures on the face of the earth are insects". There are 25,000,000 insects in the air above each square mile of the earth's surface, "3,500,000 insects live in the soil under each acre of meadowland". Of the 600,000 species, not all named, only a few hundred are enemies of man, but they cause a loss of a billion and a half annually in the United States.

BETTER SOCIETIES THAN OURS

But the insects have another claim. Not only have they developed a stable and efficient social life, but they have achieved almost a hundred percent altruism and unselfishness, qualities we poor humans strive for, boast of, but fail to attain.

The best known of these societies, which we prey upon and plunder, is that of the honey bee. But with them, as with man and nearly all mammals, the male still remains unsocialized, a disturbing element, creating war, discord, jealous hates. The females of the species are completely socialized, cooperative, and wholly altruistic except toward the males. The sisters sting the lazy drones and throw them out and so the war goes on between the sexes.

GO TO THE ANT

The ants have done better. They have not only made imposing uniformed doormen of the males, but they have subjected them to military discipline and send them out to bring in slaves to lighten the labor of the females.

Though Solomon told us sluggards long ago to 'go to the ant' we are only just beginning to go. Julian Huxley in charge of the London Zoo thinks they are stupid. Even William Morton Wheeler who knew more about ants than anyone who has lived, took cheer from the fact that the ant's social life was not perfect. He wrote:

"And so far as the actual, fundamental, biological structure of our society is concerned and notwithstanding its stupendous growth in size and all the tinkering to which it has been subjected, we are still in much the same infantile stage. But if the ants are not despondent because they have failed to produce a new social invention or convention in 65 million years, why should we be discouraged because some of our institutions and castes have not been able to evolve a new idea in the past fifty centuries?"

But the ants have done pretty well during the last hundred million years. There are more common garden ants in the world today than any other land animal of the same or larger size. There are more communists in Massachusetts than there are Republicans and Democrats together.

SOCIETY PERFECTED

Blundering man in the presence of perfection is filled with wonder and worship. Those who know the termites are impressed. This "insignificant insect, which, except in soldier form seldom attains a quarter of an inch in length, presents to those who care to study it, a living obsession of unselfishness. His life, of unknown and, it may be, indefinite duration is devoted to the interests of others: to the good of his fellow-creatures and his city."

This is quoted from Herbert Noyes' Man and the Termite, Peter Davies, London, 1937. The author has lived most of his life as a rubber planter among the termites, and though he is not a scientist, he knows the literature of the subject, gives an excellent bibliography, and quotes from the great scientific investigators. Their activities to him seem to transcend intelligence. We have fossil termites preserved in amber from the Miocene, but they probably have existed for 300,000,000 years.

Blind, living in total darkness for a hundred million years, sending out no scouts, termites in a single night will build covered two way boulevards up a concrete pillar to reach and honeycomb the wooden beam that rests upon it. How do they know it is there?

The Zulus have high respect for the termite, Noyes tells us. "My Zulu induna, N'hlutunkungu, a chief of the Isibonga of N'hlatuzi, . . ." remarked, "These teachers of yours . . . tell us of a heaven to which we may aspire and at which we may presently arrive. But, if they are to be believed, none of us are worthy of such a glorious fate. Are there many among your own people worthy of such distinction?"

"And I said, in the vernacular, no; but according to the legends there was such a Man, two thousand years ago. But when I talked of prophets and intercessors, N'hlutunkungu was strangely irresponsible. A god he could understand, but not a vicarious deity.

"One may well believe", he said in effect, 'that the good deeds of Man are not sufficient either in quality or quantity to win him celestial felicity, but that he should try to gain it through an intercessor appears to me a childish faith. . . '.

"And I told him that because of that incredulity, unwisely expressed, white and brown men had been killing each other for the last nineteen hundred years and were killing each other to-day.

"The beasts and the Termites have but one God, as we all know', he objected; 'to what end shall they employ a middle-man? This talk of go-betweens seems to me mere foolishness. It is in my mind that the Termites are nearly perfect in their mode of living; my own people are far from it, and of the white men, who can say?' "

Eugene N. Marais, an Afrikaander, after college began as a journalist, studied medicine, then was called to the Bar by the Inner Temple. Scholar, man of culture, he chose to live in a hut in the lonely Waterberg mountains, making friends with a troop of wild baboons, whose behavior he studied, and which he tamed so that he could move among them and handle them with impunity. His chief work was to be "The Soul of the Ape", a study of the behavior of apes and baboons and comparison of their mental processes with those of men.

His The Soul of the White Ant, Dodd, Mead & Company, 1937, "With a Biographical Note by his son and translated by Winifred de Kok", was written in Afrikaans, the Dutch language of South Africa.

His observations, photographs and drawings are original. Perhaps he abandons too readily the mechanistic and materialistic explanation of the behavior of the white ant. He has been over impressed possibly with the marvels of their behavior, with the fact that they consciously build arches. Two individual workers build pillars which gradually approach each other, or across the pillars lay a spear of grass, covering this with pellets of earth to make the solid structure.

Perhaps unfortunately he has adopted an attitude that will seem esoteric in assuming that the termite colony is a single organism, and that what some regard as the individual worker and soldier are akin to the red blood corpuscles and leucocytes in the blood, and that the queen corresponds with the ovary.

The fungus garden in which the white ant cultivates bacteria to digest cellulose, he regards as the digestive system of the organism.

Maeterlinck stole and used this idea six years later. Stripped of sentimentality, it is the condition revealed by the great physiologists, the modern representative of whom is Walter Cannon.

Others have regarded the human body as made up of colonies of cells each with its own activities, highly differentiated individual phagocytes, red blood corpuscles, all living symbiotically within an integument in which they float bathed in body fluids that act as a medium of exchange between different cells.

HOW WE GOT THAT WAY

Knowledge of the road that we have come over would seem to be essential to an understanding of where are we, and where do we go from here. We need guides who know the road. Philosophers, statesmen, are ignorant. Biologists, paleontologists have some knowledge of how we came to be as we are.

As Herbert Spencer said, "I believe you might as reasonably expect to understand the nature of an adult man by watching him for an hour (being in ignorance of all his antecedents) as to suppose that you can fathom humanity by studying the last few thousand years of its evolution."

HAND AND MIND

Man, 'supreme' among the mammals, is in some ways primitive. The hand of man is that of the frog. Primitive amphibians of this four fingered and thumbed type developed in the carboniferous, a hundred million years ago. That hand has been distorted and diverted into unrecognizable forms in the bird's wing, in the horse's foot. But in those animals that took to the trees, like the opossums, the tree shrews, the hand with opposable thumb became especially useful for grasping, and, when the monkeys descended from the trees, for picking up stones and sticks.

Recently discovered in Malayan jungles are living fossils, insectivorous primates, ancestors of the higher primates. "The Living Dead", by Erich M. Schlaikjer, paleontologist and geologist, Natural History, March, 1938, tells about these little rat-like patriarchs, the living images of our forefathers, that scampered about on the ground 140 million years ago, during the time of the dinosaur gangster dictators. With changed conditions, mountains where there were lowlands, arid country where there were marshes, the great overspecialized reptiles could not readapt themselves and became extinct.

But these insignificant little placentals, insectivores, primitive mammals, instead of laying eggs like the dinosaurs, produced their young alive and perhaps fed on the eggs of dinosaurs. Alert and adaptable, they flourished. Some of them took to the trees, and adapting their five fingered hand for grasping became the ancestors of the lemurs and all the monkeys and apes, while other descendants, giving up the hand for rapid locomotion on their toes, became horses, deer, antelope.

With the use of the hand, the simian brain developed and the eyes rotated forward, giving us stereoscopic vision. To our hands, more than any other one factor, we owe our brains.

CONSERVATIVES, RADICALS, LIBERALS

"Each geological period has had its three main factions in every group of mammals," Schlaikjer says, "but each time it has been extinction for the radicals and dictators, survival for a few ultra-conservative living fossils and victory for the conservative-liberals."

Some of the insectivores became extinct. Some became over-specialized and so entered into one of nature's most gigantic pitfalls of evolutionary change. Primates became the most advanced of all placentals. Today they show the same diversity from radical to ultra-conservative.

In the tropical jungles have recently been discovered some of these extreme conservatives who survived. Ghosts of primitive ancestors, living fossils, are the ratlike Tupaia of Malay and the shrewlike Ptilocercus of Borneo, timid, nocturnal tree livers only "slightly changed throughout 60 millions of years."

The confusion today in the minds of some men, because of changing conditions, is nothing to the problems that have been repeatedly faced by our ancestors, back through millions of years. Those who made the right decisions went ahead, and we are the result. The others we occasionally find as fossils.

If physical conditions change, if the plain becomes mountain, the jungle, desert, then its inhabitants migrate, readapt themselves or die. Most die. If what was once Republican plunder land becomes Democratic or socialistic Altruria, the plunder bosses must migrate, adapt or die.

Vision rather than stupid force helps to the right decision. Our 'intelligence department' needs strengthening that we may plan our campaign wisely. We are fed up with 'education', a foolish fetish. With some knowledge of the history of what has come before, we need training in how to see, how to use our senses, and how to react.

THE EVOLUTIONARY PROCESS

"No teacher with a spark of imagination or with an idea of scientific method can have helped dreaming of the immortality that would be achieved by the man who should successfully apply Darwin's method to the facts of human history." (Henry Adams, "The Tendency of History", 1894).

Evolution "even now . . . has not permeated the medical profession—at any rate as a dynamic, scientific reality . . . has not even penetrated to the dusty and probably empty recesses of the political minds which direct our social destinies. To the majority of the professional leaders of Christianity and other established religions, evolution is not merely an unsubstantiated theory, but an atheistic and anti-social philosophy, the promulgation of which is subversive to the welfare of man". E. A. Hooton, "Apes, Men, and Morons").

THE GREATEST STORY EVER TOLD

Man is still the greatest mystery to man. The story of whence he came and whither he goes, is the most enthralling of all time. For what interests us is what's ahead. All men have built in their imaginations paradises, valhallas, utopias, heavens for themselves and hells for their enemies.

But the past holds the keys to the future. Evolution is a process that has been going on since life began. Most of us believe in evolution as we believe in the Holy Ghost. We give it lip service but we don't think it out, we don't see it in action. We see instances of it sometimes when they are pointed out to us. Sometimes it is retarded. Some forms remain static under fixed conditions, like Lingula on the sea floor since the Silurian. Sometimes the process is accelerated, in jumps which are called mutations, or biological sports. With the tree shrews started a long period of continued development out of which finally resulted man.

Darwin's Theory Applied to Mankind, Longmans, Green, 1937, by Alfred Machin, is a book which brought this reader great excitement. The unstimulating title fits well enough, you find, though it does not convey any intimation of the book's importance. It gives us a vivid picture of how man has come on step by step over a period of some millions of years. It brings understanding and clarification to the most colossal problem man has faced.

Once you have achieved Machin's vision, seen the picture he presents, innumerable disturbing phases and features of human behavior fall into place like the missing pieces in a picture puzzle. Why do we fight? Why are we fundamentally sadistic? Why do we respond to martial music? Why are sex and marital mores as they are? Why is our system of law so largely based on property values? These are but indications of all the discordant facts that fit into this perfect picture, the puzzles that are solved by this understanding. It is the greatest story every told, pieced together convincingly from little clues.

A TRUE BELIEVER

England still breeds men. Darwin owed little to the universities, as did Tylor, founder of anthropology, who was a brass founder's apprentice, invited to Oxford after he had made good (cf. 21st ed., p. 100).

Alfred Machin, a civil servant of Bath, England, describes himself as an amateur. Uncorrupted by academic sophistication, for twenty years he has been collecting scientific information and data, and thinking constructively on the course of man over the past twenty-five million years. His "Ascent of Man by Means of Natural Selection", 1925, sought to show that the behavior patterns which have persisted had survival value.

This second book, awkwardly constructed, does not show a practiced hand, but it does evidence wide reading and extended knowledge. Let those deny who can that here is a first class mind, and there are not many in the world, in which every bit of evidence has been fused as in a crucible, and come out crystal clear.

SELECTION STILL GOES ON

The evolutionary process he says is still going on, still accounting for everything that man is and has been. The mysteries of life and our fellows are readily explained if we understand how things have come to be as they are. And everything in organic life has been the result of slow change and survival.

Patiently, he patches together the picture puzzle and, supplying the missing parts, explains what were incongruities, inconsistencies, densest or deepest mysteries.

"A natural selection of the fittest has brought about the progress of mankind, just as it has effected the evolution of other forms of life,—just as the amphibians were displaced and replaced by reptiles, and the latter in their turn by mammals."

OUR MORAL NATURE

Deep within us are qualities for which we feel only shame. The sense of sin, the consciousness of guilt, persists. At unexpected times men exhibit the most sadistic and selfish traits. The fallen angel, we have theorized, is born in original sin. The real story of how these traits are deep implanted in us and how we have developed other traits is one of the main themes of Machin's book.

PRIMITIVE VIRTUES

For hundreds of thousands of years, primitive man, victim of the elements, of great and savage beasts, of changing conditions, survived only through his fortitude, his ability to bear suffering and pain. Puberty ceremonies, tattooing, cicatrization, torments, impalements, cruelties have been practiced because they bring into prominence those that have survival value in contrast to the weaklings. The ability to take it, perhaps the greatest of all our virtues, is the most primitive. If our ancestors had lacked it, we should not be here. Looking back, one sees the long "Martyrdom of Man".

OUR SADISTIC NATURE

The survivors not only had to endure, but they had to witness human agony without mental disaster. And this ability persists as Machin writes, "deep down in the recesses of the human heart even unto modern days. Thus St. Thomas Aquinas made the charming remark that, 'in order that nothing may be wanting to the felicity of the saints of heaven, a perfect view is granted them of the tortures of the damned'."

Gladiatorial tortures in cultured Rome, bear baiting in England, and whipping Quakers at the cart tail in New England, lynching and the blow torch burning of the Negro in the present day South, all attest. Lecky in his "History of European Morals" recognizes as "perfectly normal", an honest inheritance, and not an unusual thing, the "real and lively pleasure" brought by human suffering and torture.

The North American Indians, Machin says, "boasted of their ferocity and cruelty, stating that it made the hearts of their enemies 'turn to water'. Frightfulness, the terrifying of an opponent, the destruction of his morale, has, however, much denied or obscured, been a constant feature of warfare."

Sadism was the morality of the solitary killer. The most cruel and ruthless, those who killed effectively, survived. The traits were deep implanted over a long time and they still come out, though today they have no survival value. In fact, under new conditions they call for swift elimination.

THE HUNTER'S MORALITY

Primitive man in hunting the wild horse and other gregarious herbivorous animals, combined for success in organized drives or to make pitfalls in taking the mammoth and the woolly rhinoceros. Cooperation came to have survival value. So the solitary were eliminated and those remained who had learned to work together, who developed social qualities, learned to sell their daughters, institute marriage, protect their rights.

"Once societies began to form, survival was governed by the winning or retention of hunting grounds, and that depended on success in battle. Success in organized warfare depended on the inhibition of fear and panic and the substitution of valour and patriotism", Machin says.

"They thus formulated and applied the principles of the first morality, and sought to secure its rule through law, religion, and reputation giving. Natural selection sat in judgment on the tribes and awarded survival to those who best practised the new morality . . . The result of this application of the first morality was to advantage the valiant and patriotic and to eliminate the craven, the insubordinate, and the socially unworthy."

The virtues of the first morality of the hunter still survive. Most of our recreational and outdoor life is "indulging those physical activities and exercising the associated emotions which fitted them to survive in those stages of man's existence which have long gone by, they are pure atavistic survivals not of muscles and organs but of organic functions."

Hunting, fishing, fighting, throw back to the first hunter stage. Group contests today take the form of football, hockey, etc. But we may enjoy all these contests vicariously, deriving the emotional outlet from onlooking. The theater, cinema, radio, and literature in large part is designed to entertain. Even our newspapers furnish sensations, emotional thrills.

THE SECOND MORALITY

The hunter became social only from pressure of population. As men came to live together more closely, those who respected the privileges of others survived. A new code developed.

This new second morality "aims first at the economic prosperity of the state and the well-being of all those who dwell therein. The fundamental condition for this is the security of property, the guaranteeing to every man the full fruits of his labour. The means to the end are industry, thrift and enterprise. . . Wealth is the prime aim and outcome of the second morality as valour was of the first.

"The second morality is thus a system of ethics, a philosophy, and code, expressed through laws, religion and public opinion, which aims to promote the prosperity and well-being or, in other words, the survival values of the members of civilized society. . .

"This common interest made the public opinion which expressed itself through laws, religion, and the attachment of reputation values, and which aimed to make private property secure and to keep the national estate inviolate. These were the basic laws, the security of private and public property. . . "Private vengeance, the original guardian of civil morality is abolished and superseded by the machinery of justice operated by society."

WHAT WE OWE TO SLAVERY

"All ancient civilisations have been based on slavery, on the enforced labour of captives . . . a necessary condition for the development of agricultural societies . . . Civilisation in its beginnings required a dual structure. An agricultural estate needed cultivators and defenders . . . governors and controllers who were soldiers, citizens and freemen . . . workers who were slaves or serfs."

And this form of civilization lasted while it had survival value. In the South in our own country it had until the sixties when it was artificially destroyed by the Northerners for whom economic conditions had long since ceased to make it profitable.

And still the dual structure persists. We see it everywhere. And it is the struggle between, the attempt to unify. Evolution is still going on, determining what has survival values,—the sociology, the economics of today. It is the fundamental dual structure in the association of many groups.

SURVIVAL VALUES FROM THE SLAVE SYSTEM

The slaves were those who were preserved, not put to the sword. They were the favored. The worker, the cultivator, was selected by the conqueror, who continued to cast off the less industrious. George Washington wrote his sea captain friend that he was sending him a recalcitrant slave to sell for what he could get in the West Indies and to bring back proceeds in rum.

"What man did for plants and animals, it was surely possible for him to do with that superior animal, the slave . . . The selective breeding of workers was probably largely unconscious", but it was easy to propagate from the best, "eliminating the unsatisfactory". History tells little of the dull drudges of labor. The process still goes on.

"The second morality represented survival value to the workers in the slave era. . . To the slaves or serfs it meant mere survival and perpetuation for the most faithful workers, and elimination for the lazy, inefficient, and recalcitrant. The laws and religious teachings were designed to maintain these principles, and to secure the perpetuation of a body of resigned and contented workers.

"The slow genesis of new types of human societies and the natural selection of that type best fitted to survive, this is the governing law of human history. . .

"The application of the second morality to the workers led consciously or unconsciously to a human selection, a process of selective breeding, and the ultimate production of a working class who were adapted and resigned to their condition . . . great change in human nature".

THE NATURE OF HUMAN NATURE

"The conflict in human nature must be due to the clash between basic or instinctive human nature and the restraints and constraints imposed by the first or second moralities, or as we might put it to the conflicts between the survival values of the different stages of human progress."

Our repressed interests, like selfishness, derived from the primitive law of self-preservation,—“unbridled anger, fear and panic, and lastly, the sentiment derived from solitary battles, sadism or love of cruelty . . . the instinct for revenge, that primordial guardian of morality . . .

"Man's survival today depends on the best synthesis or composition he can make among these conflicting demands. He has to regulate and harness his nature to achieve survival ends. Obviously too much work with repressions too severe will entail derangement and insanity. . .

"Man is, in short, like all other living things, just a bundle of survival values." Even "the patriotic spirit is nothing but the first morality in action".

OUR NEARER RELATIVES

We might think of our more distant relatives as those having in common the five fingered hand, those with whom we came out of the water on to the land. Our nearer relatives we might restrict to those with whom we came down out of the treetops on to the ground. The first, as we have seen with Schlaikjer, range back hundreds of million years, while our nearer relatives are limited in time perhaps to ten or twenty million years. What's ten million, once the relation is acknowledged.

INCREASED RESPECT FOR OUR ANCESTORS

Our increased respect for the ape is due to our better knowledge of him. For this we owe a great deal to Yerkes who has deserted his Yale associates to live with his chimpanzees at Orange Park, Florida.

But since the publication of "Up From the Ape" (cf. 16th ed. p. 64), Earnest A. Hooton, Harvard anthropologist, has become the chief apologist for man to our relatives, the apes. The latter certainly are less artificial, less sophisticated and hypocritical than we poor humans. They are more genuine and more mentally stable and show less of the inferiority complex. Those who know, say they are more companionable, and some of them certainly are not lacking in a sense of humor.

The famous satiric illustrator Cruikshank a century ago in his picture "Monster Discovered by the Orang-utans" endeavored to show how queer man must look to them. Hooton, not being blessed with the anthropocentric view of most academics and other humans, who are "so inordinately sensitive about themselves as animal organisms", does not hesitate to express the embarrassment of a more primitive simian in looking upon his contemporaries. "If you were respectable anthropoid apes, catching your first glimpse of a specimen of man, your modesty would be shocked by the spectacle of his obscene nakedness."

As Hooton with tact and erudition makes us acquainted with our ancestors over a period of some sixty million years, his caustic debunking leads us to doubt the value of some of our present myths in which we believe so devoutly. Looking at "irrepressibly noisy and babbling type of ape" which has now become man, Hooton is more impressed by his past biological accomplishment than by some of his present behavior.

HOOTON'S APES AND MEN

In Apes, Men, and Morons, Putnam, 1937, Hooton brings together addresses that have been tried out on the graduates of our universities and proved good. Some of these were quoted so extensively in our last edition, that it was practically an anthology of Hooton's anthropological quips, epigrams, and aphorisms. But here the whole has been worked over and fused. The concoction will prove good for a sluggish liver and may start something higher up. It is especially prescribed for teachers and preachers. His writing is virile, colorful and irritating.

This is a brilliantly baffling book for the reviewer. Some touch only upon a single chapter. Others confine themselves to caustic quotations. For Hooton can naively utter a truism so that it stings, as when he tells us "The United States indubitably leads the world" in "dentistry and plumbing", or reminds us "Females, after attaining a certain age, become almost immortal". His hatred of bunk has been misinterpreted by some of his reviewers, one of whom speaks of him as "a calamity howler", another "a misanthropic disciple of Nietzsche" who jibes at democracy as "making the world safe for morons".

HIS MORONS

While Yerkes has gone back to his ancestors, Hooton still lives among the morons. His quick and untrammelled mind constantly brings into incongruous juxtaposition neglected facts which produce in us morons an element of surprise. This on his part is apparently so unstudied and so unconscious that he is in great demand as a speaker of wit and humor. In his "relectant addresses publicly delivered at the instigation of persons or organizations whose requests I dared not refuse" he naively but dramatically uncovers the obvious so that he has become one of the most quoted savants.

Like the fundamentalist divines of a former generation, Hooton holds his audience by lambasting them and they like it. He tells them: "Now I really do not think that there is any peculiar virtue in the attempt to save man by science, nor do I yearn to be a saviour. But it does seem that an animal which has hoisted himself to human status by his own non-existent bootstraps ought not to be allowed to let himself down again through ignorance of the methods employed in his own original uplift."

IMPROVING MANKIND

Myopically Hooton is pessimistic, hypermetropically he is optimistic. He so loves mankind that he would be willing to destroy three quarters of them to improve the rest. His severest charge is that mankind "preserves the worst of his kind" and "destroys the best". "It is difficult to reconcile man's incessant concern over his social condition and his spiritual well-being with the apathy which he manifests toward his biological status. . . He has tried to improve everything except himself."

"Dictators want teeming populations composed mainly of weak-minded individuals whom they may use for cannon fodder. The quality which someone has called sheep-through-the-gap-ishness is the essential characteristic upon which despotic rulers build their dominance, whether it be in labor organizations, or in political parties, or in the church."

THE EDUCATION OF THE DAMNED

"So we come back to our single substantial hope which is that we may provide a sufficient smattering of education in human biology to induce these more promising juveniles to educate themselves to a point where they may know how to save the species and may proceed to do it. This of course brings me around to the subject of education, the supposed bulwark of civilization and the perennially regurgitated cud of fusty pedagogues such as I. . ."

The accepted idea is that "in the relatively recent past man came into being . . . as a super-animal endowed with the unique possession of a soul and a creative intelligence. . . So far as man falls short of biological perfection nothing can be done about it . . . Man's departure from ideal social behavior is due to sheer spiritual cussedness . . . or to defective intelligence.

"So we have the soul doctor . . . and the educationalist to stuff into all immature individuals the knowledge accumulated from a few thousands of years of recorded human experience."

As an anthropologist he accepts his full responsibility and says, "We must improve man before we can perfect his institutions". Modestly he leaves our economic situation to the economists. And he has scorn for the social tinkers.

"The ingenuity of social technicians has been expended upon the fabrication of really very clever and complicated institutions, which mechanically and theoretically are well-nigh perfect, but which do not work. . . This breakdown . . . is due to the fact that the responsible elements in society are ignorant of the biological basis of human activity as the fundamental element in the social situation."

"That part of the younger generation which is lucky enough to possess a modicum of mental endowment will have to be taught the importance of tackling this problem, before their skulls and their brains become completely ossified by advancing years and the stultifying effect of miseducation. . .

"All of the educational steps are strewn with the frustrated, including the topmost. In the course of the twelve or sixteen years of schooling of the individual, we have probably not succeeded in improving his mind but only in testing his survival ability under educational selection."

MAN'S MIND AND HIS INVENTIONS

Man is not fundamentally stupid. Twenty-five thousand years ago Cro-Magnon man had as great a cranial capacity as today, as many brain cells. And since that time every man has been born into the world with approximately the same number of millions of brain cells, all that he will ever have.

PRIMITIVE MAN

Oscar Riddle, biologist at the Carnegie Institution of Washington, writes, "As a student of life-science and the background of man, I am convinced that by nature man is more thoughtful than we now are. . . The primitive savage is kept constantly alert by ever-present danger. He is constantly thinking about the meaning of what he sees and hears. His life and the continued existence of his tribe depend largely upon his quick and correct interpretation of sights and sounds and upon a sure and ready use of whatever his environment offers for his advantage.

"Civilization and sheltered childhood have removed many a stimulus to thought, and few things in the training of the citizen now seem more important than getting him back to the primitive habit of thinking constantly and effectively."

Freed from the stress of life in the open, in contact with nature, the belief of civilized man, especially the urban dweller, is largely automatic. He does not use his brain. His information is prepared for him by textbook makers and other propaganda agencies. For some thousands of years the game of those who rule is to fool him. They plan his education that way.

Early man was obliged for survival to be scientific, and to give his young a scientific education. What do we mean by that? Use of the senses in accurate observation,—elimination of error so far as might be possible. Error in observation meant failure, death from the charging mammoth, or starvation from failure to bring him down.

Few of us have any occasion for such alertness or agility today as those naked men, with only chipped stone for weapons and implements, had in overcoming great and savage beasts for food.

PRIMITIVE INTELLIGENCE

Twenty-seven years ago, Franz Boas, professor of anthropology at Columbia, announced that the mind of primitive man was as good as ours. Now in a complete new edition The Mind of Primitive Man, Macmillan, 1938, with much new material, he still maintains his original thesis. "There is no fundamental difference in the way of thinking of primitive and civilized man." And then he proceeds to show that the mind of man today is still primitive.

"We must bear in mind that none of these civilizations was the product of the genius of a single people. Ideas and inventions were carried from one to the other. . . . When we recognize that neither among civilized nor among primitive men the average individual carries to completion the attempt at casual explanation of phenomena, but only so far as to amalgamate it with other previous knowledge, we recognize that the result of the whole process depends entirely upon the character of the traditional material."

SURVIVAL OF PRIMITIVE EXPLANATIONS

Myth, folklore, tabu control the primitive mind Boas makes abundantly clear. "The difference in the mode of thought of primitive man and that of civilized man seems to consist largely in the difference of character of the traditional material with which the new perception associates itself. . . . We are only too apt, however, to forget entirely the general, and for most of us purely traditional, theoretical basis which is the foundation of our reasoning, and to assume that the result of our reasoning is absolute truth. . . .

"In the history of civilization, reasoning becomes more and more logical, not because each individual carries out his thought in a more logical manner, but because the traditional material which is handed down to each individual has been thought out and worked out more thoroughly and more carefully. While in primitive civilization the traditional material is doubted and examined by only a very few individuals, the number of thinkers who try to free themselves from the fetters of tradition increases as civilization advances. . . .

"There is an undoubted tendency in the advance of civilization to eliminate traditional elements, and to gain a clearer insight into the hypothetical basis of our reasoning. . . . The confusion of the popular mind by the modern theories of relativity, of matter, of casualty shows how profoundly we are influenced by ill understood theories."

ENVIRONMENT AND INTELLIGENCE

Boas does not agree with Porteus that there is a racial basis of intelligence. In his Primitive Intelligence and Environment, Macmillan, 1937, S. D. Porteus tells of his travels all over the world under a grant of the Carnegie Corporation. He has made an interesting travel book of his experiences in central Australia and the Kalahari Desert. With him he took his test material for the I. Q. and Porteus Maze Test, trying them out on primitive tribes. He finds the Australian aborigines have more intelligence in some ways than the Bushmen, but the latter are better artists. These differences he relates to environmental influences.

These results, presented tentatively and somewhat apologetically, are a corrective of the "race levellers" who claim "that no real evidence of racial differences in mentality has yet been presented", but he adds, "Environment has some influence upon all of a man's reactions—whether it be the crimes he commits, the benefactions he makes or his mental test responses".

HISTORY OF CULTURE

The story of "How Man Invented His Way to Civilization", of how necessity and changing conditions stimulated the activity of hand and mind, so that he found new ways, new methods, new tools and new explanations, is the subject of The Conquest of Culture, Greenberg, 1938, by M. D. C. Crawford.

There are many books dealing with the history of culture, but Crawford brings to his volume much new material organized with clarity. His knowledge of his subject and its literature is unusually complete, his horizons wide, his vision undimmed. There is a 'truth shall make you free' purpose behind his writing.

Man's history is a record not only of his contest with nature but of how, out of the confusion that arose from his social relations with his fellows, and from the explanations of the mysteries about him inherited from his ancestors, he has come to his present status. The successive advances and retreats of the Ice Sheet after man had occupied Europe, were a challenge, a stimulus, and led to adaptations and progress.

DISCOVERY AND INVENTION

It was a great mechanical discovery when ape man first learned that he could use the cutting edge of a flint. Successive steps in the discovery of the properties of matter and the mechanical use of materials have brought us to the hydro-electric plant. We call that physics. It was the beginning of the control of molecular change, chemistry, when man first learned to master fire, to utilize the heat given off in a chemical reaction. That has brought us all the way through the synthesis of new organic compounds to the splitting of the atom.

The story of man's industries, agriculture, weaving, pottery, is here interestingly told with a wealth of human material from the most recent researches. There are many high spots, among them the interesting account of the discovery of cotton in two worlds, the development of the art of weaving, and the utilization of wool, silk, and flax, traces of which have been found as early as 5000 B.C. To the Indian agriculturists of the Americas we owe the discovery, domestication and utilization of some forty plants, most of which now are of the highest world utility.

Invention was not confined to physical things. Invention was more alive in the immaterial world. The devil was an invention, an attempt to explain, and this, too, is part of the story of the development of man's culture.

THE SOCIAL LAG

Man has always been quick to adopt new tools and gadgets. Bronze was better than flint, iron and steel still better. Such things are easily demonstrated. But for all his "social inventions, once accepted, man has a strange, often a passionate fondness, since they more often involve his emotions than his intellect", says Crawford. "He will fight fiercely and endure bravely for a law or a custom about which he knows little or nothing and which has perhaps been a terrible burden to him. But he will discard an old and faithful tool in place of a better one without a moment's hesitation of sentimentality. . .

"Man had invented both the machines and the legal systems that prevented the most fruitful use of the machines. The machines he constantly changed; the laws he held, by some strange confusion of mind, to be perfect and unchangeable. Society was self-shackled by the shadows of its own creations. . .

"Our society for two thousand years has developed only one escape for its surplus mechanical energy. This escape is the ancient hag of war. . .

"Suppose one-half or one-quarter of the true costs of the last war and its aftermath had been spent intelligently in plans to improve the world, clean out pest holes, lead water to deserts, destroy slums and spread education and create beauty spots and give to leisure a fruitful direction. Would the world today be armed against itself? . . .

"We can find little hope in institutions; only in the individual's processes of thought." Man's effort today is to destroy. The greater part of his labor goes to pay for past and prepare for future wars.

It is the social lag, the persistence of old and dead ideas and explanations, valuable when invented, but now preserved as sacred. It takes brave, bold, clear seeing men to speak out, to destroy, to clear the way.

CIVILIZATIONS IN HISTORY

Civilization, its nature and basis, has been the subject of many reviews in this Handbook. Clive Bell and J. H. Denison dilated on the basis of civilization (cf 13th ed., pp. 39, 40). Spengler distinguished a cycle of fifteen hundred years (cf. 11th ed., pp. 53, 54). Sorokin counted eight major cycles of fluctuations of his 'insensate' classification. With the coming of the new relativity and semantics, and the passing of the old Aristotelian idea of identities, all this becomes obsolete and archaic.

OTHER CIVILIZATIONS

Toynbee in his "Study of History" (cf. 19th ed., pp. 74-76), to run to thirteen volumes, describes five great recent and current civilizations and through time distinguishes from primitive societies twenty-one civilizations. And as our knowledge increases, the number of cultures or civilizations becomes greater.

The Mexican artist, Miguel Covarrubias, in his Island of Bali, Knopf, 1937, is impressed with the culture of the people, of Hindu and indigenous elements. All enter into the art as a natural, unsegregated phase of their culture. It is significant that there is no word in the language for 'artist' who is always "an amateur, casual and anonymous", his work "an expression of collective thought . . . his only aim is to serve his community".

LOST CIVILIZATIONS

But there are lost civilizations, variants of cultures that emanated from India. Toward Angkor, In The Footsteps of the Indian Invaders, George G. Harrap & Co., Ltd., London, 1937, is by H. G. Quaritch Wales, author of "Siamese State Ceremonies". Financed by the Greater-India Research Committee, of which Rabindranath Tagore is a member, and under the patronage of the Maharaja Gaekwar of Baroda, Dr. Wales after service in Siam and a thorough grounding in Hindu and Buddhist civilizations, undertook two archaeological expeditions from 1934 to 1936 which revealed the routes of trade along which the culture of India and her Empire was extended from the first to the thirteenth century into Indo-China, Java, and Bali.

From the time of Sir Thomas Raffles, Governor of Java during the Napoleonic period, the white man in the jungles of the Malay Peninsula, Java, Indo-China, has been coming upon carved stone, Buddhas and Indian images, which have aroused his wonder and amazement. For half a century after Mouhot first found the gigantic monuments of Angkor amid the jungle, white men in their ignorance have repeated awesome, mysterious stories to account for its origin. Now from India itself has come the inspiration to follow the paths by which Indian culture, during and after the Buddhist period, was carried eastward and how as a result of its grafting on Malay or Mongolian stock, there grew up great empires, each with its own culture and art monuments. In Burma we have the thirteenth century brick city of Pagan, covering sixteen square miles. In Indo-China successive empires of Fu-Nan culture are now known.

Successive influences from India, Gupta, Palava, Chelukya sent forth waves of culture across the Malay Peninsula into Indo-China and Java. Wales and his wife, tracing the abandoned trade routes through the jungles, finding a ruin here, an image among tree roots there, have, with the aid of scholars who know the Chinese and Arabian classic tales of travel, reconstructed the history of this expansion. Mightiest of all was the Sailendra Empire, whose base was on the Malay Peninsula. It penetrated into Indo-China and Java, and maintained diplomatic relations and trade with China and the Arabs. Borobodur, built between 800 and 1200 A.D., is its greatest monument. The last of these great civilizations, largely indigenous, was that of the Khmer which climaxed at Angkor.

AMERICAN CIVILIZATIONS

America's Yesterday, by F. Martin Brown, Lippincott, 1937, is a brave first attempt to present a coordinated picture of the pre-Columbian peoples of both North and South America. Much of our knowledge is very recent and as yet it is incomplete and difficult to interpret. The pieces are put together jigsaw puzzle style, revealing many still lacking. In no other one volume can we find so comprehensive an account of the peoples of America from Alaska to Patagonia. It is especially valuable for what it tells us of the tribes and cultures of Central America and the peoples of South America, the Basket Makers and the Mound Builders.

Of the great civilizations of the Americas,— with individual cultures, the author identifies the Inca state as communistic under a dictator, the Aztecs as fascist, the Pueblos as democratic, the Mayas as oligarchic. In almost any society studied, anthropologists distinguish all these elements of cooperation and competition in varying degrees in each culture or society.

CIVILIZATIONS DESTROYED

At the opening of the century we knew almost nothing of the great Cretan civilization, and the Hittites were little more than a name in the Old Testament. Now, thanks to the spade of the archeologist, we know these to have been two great and vigorous civilizations. Crete flourished for three thousand years or more, the Hittite flowered more briefly.

Stanley Casson, brilliant young English archeologist and classicist, has been digging among these destroyed cities of the Near East. Two years ago he delighted us with an able survey of "The Progress of Archeology" (cf. 20th ed., p. 145). Now, in Progress and Catastrophe, Harpers, 1937, he is impressed with the destruction, with the sudden catastrophe that overwhelmed these ancient cities he has studied.

He comes back to London and Paris and finds them ideally set for destruction. He contrasts them with Byzantium, which lasted for twelve hundred years, with Cnossus, which lasted twice as long, with Hattosas of the Hittites, which lasted but for a short time. And he shows how much easier it is today with our modern weapons of destruction to completely wipe out a city or a civilization than it was in the days of the Cretans and the Hittites.

The Cretan civilization had reached a more modern stage than the Babylonian or Egyptian one where "man could live the good life without the constraint of a theocracy and could select a place for its development which made defensive warfare unnecessary".

RETROGRESSION

"Historical analogies are usually foolish and always dangerous", Casson says, but "contemporary conditions suggest the reappearance of retrogressive forces." He believes that our present civilization has passed its prime and we are now undergoing such a period of slow decay as did the Roman civilization, as reflected in the letters of Sidonius (430-487 A.D.), a Christian bishop who lived at Arverna, now Clermont in Central France. An edition of these letters, translated by O. M. Dalton, was published by the Clarendon Press, 1915. Sidonius reflects the conditions of his time without any understanding of what was happening. The slow infiltration of crude barbarians, the gradual decline of the culture for which he stood, filled him with horror and loathing. He shut himself off from the world about him, but kept up an active correspondence with cultured people like himself, carping about the changes that were going on, without comprehending their significance. When Arverna was captured by the Goths, he was imprisoned, but later restored to his bishopric.

Casson sees here the same state of affairs, as among the cultured and conservative people of today. He writes:

"Now they find life more amenable shut up in the confines of their own libraries, where the outer world regards them as harmless cranks unable fortunately to affect the general course of affairs, which are more satisfactorily run by ruthless men who are not worried by the logical necessity of liberty, justice or freedom of speech, those outworn shibboleths of a pedantic world. . . In America President Roosevelt saw the advantages of making the theorists come down to earth and help administration. In France there are politicians of merit who began life as professors. But in England politicians seem to have been politicians from birth, with Personal Advancement as their fairy godmother."

ERAS END

The most complete presentation of a people in decline, their mores, thought, activities, ideals, aims, purpose in life, is presented in Jules Romains' monumental "Men of Good Will", the fourteenth volume of which brings the story up to the beginning of 1914. Here you see the people of France living their diverse lives just as if you had taken the roofs off and could see into their hearts and skulls over a period of years. It is a dispassionate presentation of some hundreds of typical personalities of every social station, with innumerable motivations, all moving toward inevitable debacle.

Struthers Burt made a reconnaissance of the people of New England along the coast in the summer of 1935 and reported on his anthropological and psychological survey in Scribner's, March, 1936. He found an aristocracy living in the past, longing for its return, oblivious to changes that had already taken place.

OUR WESTERN CIVILIZATION

The study of whence came our current intellectual and social attitudes has been neglected. But it was this that Francis Bacon had in mind in planning "a just and universal history of learning", that should describe the origin and progress of the arts and sciences, their decline and rebirth, the revolutions of thought and their causes.

ITS CAUSE AND CURE

Until the late nineties we took civilization as a matter of course. Were we not the flower of God's effort, and did we not stand at the apex of evolution and history? Edward Carpenter first made the late Victorians a bit self-conscious with his "Civilization, Its Cause and Cure". But they took it as a joke. Post-war pessimism brought genuine doubts as to the value of our civilization, voiced in Freud's "Our Misfit Civilization" (cf. 14th ed., p. 60) and "Civilization and Its Discontents" (cf. 15th ed., p. 72).

'Our civilization may be destroyed in the next war' has become a bromide. Just what we mean by 'our civilization' we seldom analyze. Our ideas about it are rather fuzzy. What we would miss most is those patterns of behavior to which we are accustomed and which we sanctify under names like 'law and order', 'democracy', and Christianity. All that could be 'destroyed' we have acquired in the last two thousand years through Rome and Greece from the East. We Western Europeans would all regard our progenitors of two thousand years ago as barbarians. The more effete of us might prefer such cultivated modes of behavior as prevailed in India during Asoka's time or among the Mandarins in China during the Sung dynasty.

INTELLECTUAL HISTORY

There could be no interest in the history of the intellect when we believed that all knowledge and wisdom was of God. Draper and Lecky in mid-Victorian times were the first to make adequate attempts to untangle the skein of our woolly beliefs. Now Harry Elmer Barnes makes a much needed advance in An Intellectual and Cultural History of the Western World, Random House, 1937. It is a whale of a book, a colossal mappa mundi of the human mind, not merely a historical panorama, but a guide to our present day mental content, a help toward understanding what lies about us and ahead.

Barnes is a synthesist who attempts to see things as a whole. His inspiration as always is James Harvey Robinson. He does not hesitate to lay himself open to criticism in his fearless interpretations. The analytical academic historian divides history into minute fields for intensive study. No fair academic can deny that Barnes is an indefatigable scholarly organizer of neglected historical material. But praise will hardly come from those whose territory he has ruthlessly not merely invaded, but conqueringly marched across, possessing himself of the treasures they had overlooked.

ECONOMIC HISTORY

This Barnes is a prolific phenomenon. Some call him brilliant but superficial. Two years ago he gave us "The History of Western Civilization" (cf. 20th ed., pp. 121-123). His recent product is prodigious. Social Thought from Lore to Science, Heath, 1938, in collaboration with Howard Becker, consists of two volumes, "A History and Interpretation of Man's Ideas About Life With His Fellows" and "Sociological Trends Throughout the World".

In An Economic History of the Western World, Harcourt, Brace, 1937, Barnes tells the story of how man has provided for his daily needs from the stone age to the present. Narrative, concise, comprehensible, neither orthodox nor radical, he shows us fundamental economic forces at work through thousands of years of man's history. With amazingly scholarly grasp of economic relationships, he simplifies and clarifies an encyclopedic mass of erudition. His talent for organizing bewildering material makes this informing and stimulating treatise the best possible antidote to the traditional histories which ignore or avoid fundamental relationships. No theorist seeking proofs, he organizes facts to speak for themselves in a way that will make the usual conservative who has lived on mythology and tradition squirm.

Except for those committed to communism or conservatism, who are bitterly disappointed, those competent to review write in unstinted praise. R. K. Lamb in The Nation writes, "The materials he presents are assertions, most of them out of the mouths of others; these are not usually well related one to another". Crane Brinton in The Saturday Review of Literature says, "He is careful about establishing his facts, and his range among facts is encyclopedic". Brinton sneers that he is writing "sociology rather than history", that "emotions arrange facts". That Barnes gives half his book to contemporary society is not in accordance with the academic pattern. His liberalism, one of a half dozen kinds, is "individual and strongly optimistic".

HISTORIOGRAPHY

A History of Historical Writing, by Harry Elmer Barnes, University of Oklahoma Press, 1937, the author asserts "is the only book of its kind in any language", on the ways in which history has been written and the theories or philosophies of historical writing. The development of pre-literary history and the mastery of the art of writing, the development of a calendar and chronology are followed by chapters on the historical writings of the Greeks and Romans, the early Christians, the Middle Ages, Humanism, the Reformation. The beginnings of the philosophy of history, the recent trends of Croce, Spengler, and Barth, and the influence of liberalism and nationalism on historical writing, are expounded. "The Rise of Critical Historical Scholarship" in the 18th century is followed in England, Germany, France, and America, through to the World War. This takes us through the first half of the book.

"The Fall and Rise of Historical Scholarship" tells of the influence of the World War in debasing the critical faculties of most historians, and how the few who stood stoutly for truth were subjected to persecution and invective. During this war hysteria, Barnes, just out of college, was an enthusiastic writer of pro-war propaganda for the Creel bureau, helping to get us into the war. It is perhaps because of his desire to atone that he so painstakingly analyzes what happened to the best historical minds in this period of hysteria.

The last hundred pages and more are given to the broadening perspective of the historian, to the "History of Culture", the "Sciences of Man" and "The New History". Here we deal with archeology, anthropology, the history of science, of technology, economic history, social history. The new history has achieved its triumph. It has opened up a new method, new fields. He tells us about the training necessary for it.

Barnes is a free man who can look facts in the face without regard to visiting committees, overseers, trustees, who exert so powerful an influence in intimidating most academic historians. He would be the last to claim that his work was final, but it is a step in advance. Let others who follow do better. They should, but they will have to work with a broad knowledge and something better than a judicial mind to accomplish it.

MAINTAINING CIVILIZATION

"The mere upkeep of our present complicated culture must depend upon a very trifling percentage of the population", James Harvey Robinson is quoted in "Wise Man's Burden", Current History, January, 1938, by Joseph Jastrow, who adds, "A saving remnant maintains civilization; the rest, competently though they do their bit, are but worthy camp-followers."

BURDEN OF THE INCOMPETENTS

"Under the humanitarian code, many are born unfit to cope with the exactions of competitive civilized life, but are maintained by a sentiment that finds its justification elsewhere. Constitutionally unable to make the grade, the weak become a burden upon the strong. . . If every metropolis segregated its dismal City of Deficiency, as does in part the social geography of New York harbor . . . the burden-bearers would be more cognizant of their burden . . .

"If New York may be accepted as a 10 per cent sample of the United States, the total 'insane' population in public institutions . . . would number about 700,000 . . . Only 400,000 are reported as in institutions . . . The insane equal in number the student population of the 175 universities and colleges of the land with an attendance of 1000 or more . . . One person in 22 in New York State, and one in 18 in New York City, may be expected to develop mental disorder at some time in life—though not for life." Dr. Horatio M. Pollock "has computed the economic loss in earnings of the mentally afflicted in New York State for 1937 to be $1,000,000,000,—$10,000,000,000 for the United States."

THE WEAK SHALL INHERIT THE EARTH

If the inferior continue to breed and the superior to sterilize themselves, "the weak will inhabit so much of the earth as remains". At present this country has about four in every thousand and "mentally deficient", Jastrow reminds us. "If the lower moronic grade be included, at least 1 per cent of the population is mentally defective, in the clinical-social sense that they cannot 'manage their affairs with ordinary prudence'."

Above them we have the 'dullards'. "The feeble minded . . . at least are not an active menace to society, except as they reproduce their kind . . . Hence the dismal warning of Professor Hooton in 'Apes, Men and Morons': 'Society faces the immediate prospect of domination by quick-breeding dullards.'

" 'Modern man is selling his biological birthright for a mess of morons' . . . Of 8000 delinquent children appearing in a juvenile court of New York City, only 20 per cent had normal or better I. Q.'s . . . 50 per cent of the Sing Sing inmates are under 25 and 80 per cent under 30 years of age. 'We Americans', says Dean Roscoe Pound, 'have more crime per capita than the British for the same reason that we have more automobiles, more telephones, more ton-miles of freight moving, more horse-power of electric energy per capita'."

Dr. Norman E. Himes' Medical History of Contraception, Williams and Wilkins, 1936, tracing the practice from pre-historic times to the present, prophesies that the intelligence of the American population will decline five to eight per cent in the next two hundred years, if the present dysgenic trends continue. He advocates (1938) that the cost of one battleship, $100,000,000, be put into a ten-year biological-sociological survey of human resources in the United States, that we may make a biological plan for our future population.

WHO ADVANCES IT

Only one-tenth of one percent of our people are advancing civilization. Only thirty thousand are engaged in discovering the truth in research in science or engineering. For the world the percentage is much smaller. The vast majority of us are parasitic on this trifling percentage, for it is cranks that make the world go round. It is the geniuses that inspire.

"The present world owes no normal civilized person anything. On the contrary, every modern man—and particularly every really educated and physically normal person—is under unpayable and overwhelming debt to a few exceptional and creative men who have in effect transformed a world and with it literally created modern man." (Oscar Riddle).

"All 'material' progress among humans is due uniquely to the brain-work of a few mostly underpaid and overworked workers, who exercise properly their higher nervous centers," writes Korzybski in "Science and Sanity".

"In the Soviet Union, where the social importance of science seems to be especially appreciated, it is reported that the funds made available for the development and prosecution of scientific studies is relatively greater than in any other country of the world", says Dr. Walter Cannon, and he quotes Pavlov, 1938:

"Only science, exact science about human nature itself, and the most sincere approach to it by the aid of the omnipotent scientific method, will deliver man from the existing darkness, and will purge him from his shame in inter-human relations."

CONTEMPORARY SOCIAL SCHEME

"The golf links lie so near the mill
That almost every day
The laboring children can look out
And see the men at play."

This is Sarah Cleghorne's brief but vivid picture of twentieth century society. Vaughan Wilkins' "And So Victoria" pictures these children a hundred years ago deep in coal mines, or in a mill that had no such beautiful scene from the window,—only slag heaps. The men would have been carousing at the inn or using a strap on the laboring children, (cf. Hansard). A few centuries earlier the men would have been in armor, ahorse, picking along the road, the children sniveling at the door of a hut. The social scene does change.

The vast majority of men are more or less content with their lot. Like their ancestors they will go on salting the earth with their bones, unheeding. The solid citizen always endeavors to keep the boat from rocking. But in spite of their best efforts there are trouble makers, those dissatisfied with our social system. There have always been such, but in spite of, or perhaps because of, red hunts, political persecutions, protective arrests, detention camps, and barbed wire, the numbers increase. There are always those who fancy they see something ahead for which they reach or agitate.

A SLAVE CIVILIZATION

The story of our social system is quickly told. It is a slave system, as so many including Machin have clearly shown. Aristotle believed that slavery must be the basis of all civilization. The first civilizations of Mesopotamia go back perhaps ten thousand years, slave civilizations surrounded by barbaric herds-men and hunters. America, Australia, Central Asia, most of Africa continued up to recent time in this primitive state, while slave civilizations developed in the valleys of the fertile crescent. Greece and Rome remained slave civilizations throughout. All of Europe continued to be a serf civilization till within a few hundred years, and Eastern Europe till within recent time.

We have come far, and there are those who doubt that "slavery exists by the law of nature". But it is only a hundred years since the anti-slavery movement began in England. As late as 1831 in Pennsylvania towns white men, indentured servants, were sold, shackled and branded, and runaways advertised. Our ancestors two thousand years ago were barbarians. Some of them as Roman slaves acquired some knowledge of civilization. The Negro more recently in the last few centuries in the same way through slavery has acquired civilization.

What we call our 'social system' is the result of the behavior of a great number over a long period of time. The larger phases of this seen through history we call 'civilization'. Gustavus Myers, thirty years ago, wrote about the behavior of some of the more potent members of our current society and how they acquired wealth. His books have become classic, used even in the great universities.

"It is obvious that in both past and present times the chief beneficiaries of our social and industrial system have found it to their interest to represent their accumulations as the rewards of industry and ability, and have likewise had the strongest motives for concealing the circumstances of all those devious methods which have been used in building up great fortunes . . .

"While it is true that the methods employed by these very rich men have been, and are, fraudulent, it is also true that they are but the more conspicuous types of a whole class which, in varying degrees, has used precisely the same methods, and the collective fortunes and power of which have been derived from identically the same sources."

PREVAILING MYTHS

The older forms of physical slavery are pretty well a thing of the past, though we hear of wage slaves and we know that few of us are economically free. We like to believe that we have achieved 'political freedom', 'equality', and 'democracy'. But intellectually the great mass of us are still slaves to inherited beliefs, to prevailing myths, to customs, mores, tabus, inherited from a dead past.

"Organizations always tend to assume the characters given to them by popular mythology", writes Thurman Arnold in "The Folklore of Capitalism". "Probably the only way in which mythologies actually change is through the rise to power of a new class whose traditional heroes are of a different mold. . . At first it is looked down on. Gradually it accumulates a mythology and a creed. Finally all searchers for universal truth, all scholars, all priests (except, of course, unsound radicals), all educational institutions of standing, are found supporting that class and everyone feels that the search for legal and economic truth has reached a successful termination."

"'Mythology', 'theology' and 'philosophy' are different terms for the same influences which shape the current of human thought, and which determine the character of the attempts of man to explain the phenomena of nature, writes Franz Boas in "The Primitive Mind". "Herein lies the immense importance of folk-lore in determining the mode of thought. Herein lies particularly the enormous influence of current philosophic opinion upon the masses of the people, and the influence of the dominant scientific theory upon the character of scientific work."

THE HUNGER INCENTIVE

All animal life is parasitic, dependent on the green of the grass, the chlorophyl which can directly utilize the energy of the sun. Out of this primitive urge for food, with the abundance the earth affords, man has created an art. And the epicure, to satisfy his taste for fine wines and good cookery, must have wealth.

At Yale there is a man, C. C. Furnas, Associate Professor of Chemical Engineering, who two years ago in this Handbook showed us how to look ahead "The Next Hundred Years", (cf. 20th ed., pp. 132, 133) to look over the unfinished business of science. It was a whale of a book, written in corking style.

With the aid of his wife he has now turned to the one great interest of man,—food. Something of this is in the title, Man, Bread and Destiny, Reynal & Hitchcock, 1937, written in the same crisp, scintillating, pungent manner resulting from an active brain that fairly decrepitates with electrical discharges. With wit, wisdom, and infectious enthusiasm, he deals with food, its chemistry, customs, substitutions, tabus. And for food almost everything has been used. Where populations are dense, tabus count for less in the face of starvation,—"A man must eat". "Freud to the contrary, the Great Motivator of the human race has been the empty stomach."

Logan Clendening in his new edition of The Human Body, Knopf, 1937, quoted by Menninger, writes:

"When a man is no longer under the grinding necessity of acquiring food for his next meal, he will turn to other things—to the operations of the stock exchange, to politics, racehorses, or the gathering of first editions. When a woman no longer needs to exert any mystical fascination of limb or lip to capture a sugar-broker, she turns to lyric poetry or dyspepsia. But in none of the variegated depravities of the mind or soul—the plan of the battle of Austerlitz, the Fifth Symphony, the ritual of the Holy Communion, the belfry tower at Bruges, the organization of the Standard Oil Company, the 'Ode on a Grecian Urn', or Rob Haselton's collection of postage stamps—can I discern anything but a weak disguise either of the means to acquire food and shelter that they may be converted into energy and tissue, or of the means to acquire a mate in order that another individual may be reproduced."

WHO SURVIVES?

But the hunger incentive, the fear of lack of food to sustain life, is still a driving force in our civilization with the great mass of humans. It is this hunger incentive that holds the masses to uncongenial labor that they may have food to survive and propagate their kind, for survival values are determined in our social system by starvation as among primitive man. But starvation includes lack of even other things than food. More is needed in a densely populated city.

If you can earn more than $1000 a year, you have twice the chance of living. Josephine Roche, Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, speaking before the National Health Association, October, 1937, said that, from the ten major diseases causing three out of four deaths in the United States, the death rate of 40 to 50 million Americans living on less than $1000 a year was twice that of the rest of the population. But Southern tenant farmers seldom have incomes of even $500 or $600 per family.

"In the past twenty-five years, 375,000 of our women are known to have died to bring the world new life. This is a greater number than that of all the men killed in all our wars since the Declaration of Independence." But Paul de Kruif, from whose The Fight for Life, Harcourt, Brace, 1938, this is quoted, shows that this is entirely unnecessary. The theme of his book is that life is a matter of income, the wherewithal to stave off death.

WEALTH ACCUMULATION

All our wealth is derived from the soil, that is, through labor on the surface of the earth or in mines below, or atmosphere within two miles of sea level. But from geniuses man has had to learn how to efficiently and effectively produce wealth. If a man who could make ten axes, under supervision can make twenty, he can afford to give up nine joyfully.

But wealth has a tendency to accumulate in the hands of the acquisitive and forceful. Roscoe Lewis Ashley in "Our Contemporary Civilization" (cf. 20th ed., pp. 119, 120) reminds us that before the day of corporations wealth circulated; now its concentrations are perpetuated. "Corporate property has partially supplanted private property in this country". The Federal Trade Commission has shown that "six-tenths of one percent of the population owned forty-two and one-half per cent of all income-producing property and nearly sixty per cent of all the wealth in the United States."

"Robert H. Jackson, Assistant Attorney General of the United States, . . . 'By 1933 over 53 per cent in value of all assets owned by corporations in this country was owned by only 618 out of our half million corporations.' " (quoted by John Allen Murphy in Harpers, June, '37.

There is an extensive literature explaining how wealth is accumulated through selling of 'securities', stock market devices, whereby the lambs are shorn and wealth accumulates while men decay. Bernard J. Reis in False Security, The Betrayal of the American Investor, Equinox Cooperative Press, 1937, explains from the evidence brought out in suits the "wringing out", process by which bond buyers lose out through "the manipulations and chicanery practiced by many of the most reputable of our financial institutions".

There is a tendency for wealth to accumulate, and now that we have the self-perpetuating, immortal corporation, the process is accelerated and intensified.

THE EFFECT OF INCOME

Income determines social attitudes. Too little is harmful. A lot of sentiment is wasted, that is, it isn't effective, in deploring the hard fate of the great mass of people who don't have enough income, who don't have enough anything.

But there is another way of looking at it. We ought to save the mentality of our best. Many good men, capable of great things, are forever spoiled, lost to the world, their abilities latent or perverted by too much of what in lesser quantities would be good. It is too bad to have a thoroughbred spoiled by letting him loose at the bin of oats. He eats too much and founders.

Greed is not a pleasing quality. Those who are distended with gluttony are not good to look upon. The earth has yielded abundantly. The great mass of men have been stupid, weak, defrauded, and a few have gorged themselves unconscionably. The Los Angeles Bishop asked Lincoln Steffens his cure for the abuses of our present social system. In reply Steffens reverted to the story of Eve, and suggested, "Remove the apple".

Still, if apples are lying about, they will be appropriated and some will get social colic and become conspicuous nuisances. A decent society such as that of the white ants finds ways of policing and restricting such unsocial abuses.

How careless the American people are about such matters, how imperfect our social organization, is shown in numerous books telling of abuses that went unheeded until recently.

In The Guggenheims: The Making of an American Dynasty, Covici Friede, 1937, Harvey O'Connor, the man who told us about "Mellon's Millions", tells how the Guggenheims and Barney Baruch during the war took 350 million from the American people, increased the market value of their copper stocks three to four times. This, of course, is more of an indictment of the intelligence of the American people than of the cupidity of the Guggenheims. It gives point to Henry Ford's question, "Why should such men as the Guggenheims be paid for ore in the ground in the state of nature?"

OUR HEREDITARY OLIGARCHY

Some of these researches and exposures are referred to as 'muckraking' because they do not present the advantages of the system as well as the abuses, and so they meet with the contempt or bitter satire of supporters of our present system. Ferdinand Lundberg's America's 60 Families, Vanguard, 1937, has won this distinction. Lundberg shows the extent of intermarriage among these families that have had great wealth over a period of three generations, making them "the living center of the modern industrial oligarchy which dominates the United States, functioning discreetly under a de-jure democratic form of government behind which a de-facto government, absolutist and plutocratic in its lineaments, has gradually taken form—since the Civil War."

Lundberg's work is sensational journalism, which makes exciting reading. But the wealth of authorities cited, with the extensive quotations from them, make one realize that it is the facts that are sensational. Time emphasized trivialities. The commentators indulged in violent diatribe. I. F. Stone, editorial writer of the New York Post, in a review said, "Only an academic eunuch could cover Mr. Lundberg's subjects without passion". The author cites an article of Sorokin in Social Forces, May, 1925, on American fortunes, which showed that our moneyed families were becoming dynastic.

"Among millionaires of the last generation Sorokin discovered that 38.8 per cent had started poor whereas among living millionaires only 19.6 per cent started life in humble circumstances. Of the older generation 29.7 per cent began life as millionaires whereas of the present generation no less than 52.7 per cent were independently wealthy upon attaining their majorities and 31.5 per cent sprouted from comfortably prosperous surroundings."

OTHER PEOPLE'S MONEY

Brandeis "found that the great danger was not that these men owned all these resources but that they controlled them by means of 'other people's money'—the essence of finance capitalism. Such control made for recklessness of operation, since the very great losses that were sustained from time to time bore most heavily on moderately circumstanced citizens. Such control also made possible the reaping of enormous profits by manipulation, profits in which the actual owners of property usually did not share. The consequences against which Brandeis specifically warned did not descend on the nation until 1929-33."

Chief Justice Hughes' investigation of the insurance companies, he recalls, showed that \$51,000 of stock, whose dividend amounted to $\frac{1}{8}$ of 1%, "gave control of \$504,000,000 of assets".

"AMERICAN SOCIETY"

Naturally such an oligarchy of wealth is surrounded by parasites and climbers, who constitute what is called in the newspapers Society, with a capital 'S'. The Saga of American Society, Scribner, 1937, is by Dixon Wecter. This thirty-one year old professor, in a scholarly tome, attempts to give an historic picture of the upper crust, and in conclusion writes:

"It has bought Old Masters, but fed few living artists. Its tastes in music and opera have been both timid and grandiose, and its patronage of literature has been negligible. Unhappily it forsook politics more than a century ago, though for reasons not wholly unselfish it longs just now to return. With generosity it has sometimes given to charity and education, though it has wasted other great sums in foolish ways. To the wisdom, goodness and piety of mankind it has afforded at best an erratic and whimsical support. In all these ways American society has shown characteristic shortsightedness."

OUR CASTE SYSTEM

A corrective to the persistent myth of equal opportunity for all will be found in Caste and Class in a Southern Town, Yale University Press, by John Dollard, author of "Criteria for the Life History". This research, carried on not without some danger to the investigator, reveals the system by which the Negro inferiority complex is maintained, and how strictly caste and class lines are drawn. The study is psychological rather than economic. He shows how fear, hatred, and aggression have built up the "personality of the Negro", his habits and attitudes.

In an interesting study of the Half-Caste, with a preface on prejudices by Lancelot Hogben, Martin Secker and Warburg, Ltd., London, 1937, Cedric Dover shows that it is the prejudiced treatment of the half-caste that establishes his inferiority complex. He cites abundant anthropological studies to show that he is in no way inferior. He cites numerous authors, Lord Raglan, Toynbee. He points out that "in South Carolina a Negro population comprising 51 per cent of the total was only allotted 11 per cent of the educational funds".

CULTURES WITHIN CULTURES

Within our own culture there are other cultures, groups organized for their own self interests, with their own mythology, traditions, practices, moralities, language. Thurman Arnold in his "Folklore of Capitalism" gives us an inside view of the mythology and moralities, prevailing mores and symbols, among the legal lights of lower New York.

An illuminating study of one of these parasitic cultures has been made by Edwin H. Sutherland, professor of sociology at Indiana University, in The Professional Thief, University of Chicago Press, 1937. It is based on discussions with and revelations written while in prison of one Chick Conwell, now dead, who tells how he became a thief, how he acquired the technique, and established the essential contacts and protection so that he could carry on. Sutherland has annotated, checked, and interpreted, and shown that thieves have a culture of their own which extends back to Elizabethan times, a language of their own, a code of ethics of their own. They have their own distinctive culture, skills, arts. And on the success of this, they parasitize themselves on the culture of the greater number.

"It is practically impossible to understand an individual professional thief without this more general knowledge of the group to which he belongs. . . The culture of the underworld grows out of and is related to the general culture . . . our general social institutions."

Courtney Ryley Cooper in Here's To Crime, Little, Brown, 1937, asserts that "There are not twenty of our first class cities in which a non-partisan investigation would not result in a dozen prominent citizens being sent to jail. At least four thousand of our policemen would prove to have criminal records if fingerprints were taken."

The "legal profession protects, clogs the courts, delays prosecutions, opens prison doors, surrounds criminals with legal safeguards."

Henry F. T. Rhodes, of the Institute of Criminology, University of Lyons, in The Criminals We Deserve, Oxford University Press, 1937, traces the conditions which make criminals, and finds the roots in our economic and social system, which results in mass production of criminals as of other things. "The revolt of the criminal against society is often born in the first place of nothing more than a revolt against intolerable conditions."

OUR CONTEMPORARY ANCESTORS

But within a community or within any group, not all have come along the evolutionary path equally, as in a well socialized species like the bees, ants, or termites.

Social fossils, contemporary ancestors, are all about us. Remote from modern currents in the Southern mountains are people of our stock who are still Elizabethans in language, arts, and folklore. But in every community there are men who belong to a past century, to whose minds social consciousness has not yet come. And even in banking houses and Wall Street are 'trogloodytes' without social conscience. "Our contemporary ancestors", Walter H. Page called them.

THE NEW RELIGIONISTS

For a year Heard and Huxley have been traveling about in America,—Boston, Black Mountain, Hollywood. It is apparent that in discussions and bull sessions they have gone pessimistic and turned to religion. Zen Buddhism and Yoga, monasticism, self-abnegation, obedience, and chastity, are various concomitants of the new religion these two somewhat tired backsliders have concocted for their comfort. Recovery from the depression may be prognosticated.

ANOTHER MORALITY

Gerald Heard, brilliant author of "The Source of Civilization", discoverer of a "proto-civilization" bringing an ancient paradise to view, enthusiastically hailed in previous editions of this Handbook, calls his latest work The Third Morality, Morrow, 1937. The first two moralities are also described by Machin, whose treatment of the development of moral standards through survival values over a period of millions of years is more scientific and organic.

In his foreword Heard attempts a dogmatic crystallization of vague gropings. He makes the vulnerable error of putting into the past tense as accomplished, what are actually working hypotheses and his imaginings projected on the future. He tells us, "This book is called 'The Third Morality' because in man's history he has had three main moralities, three general ideas of conduct based on the three world-pictures he has so far made.

"The first world-picture, and its resultant morality, was Anthropomorphism, the belief that the universe was the expression of individual persons, and then of one such supreme person. The second world-picture was Mechanomorphism, the belief that the universe could be explained as a huge machine." This Second Morality "has never really succeeded in functioning", just as the second Napoleon never did. "The Third Morality is the gradually defining impress which is to-day beginning to be made by the third world-picture."

Just before his book was published he wrote me, "You ask me to let you know what I'm at work on now: a book on the practical question of what is the behaviour we should have, faced with the present facts of Science. People when they think they are deducing from Science are usually deducing from stale Science. Hence they think they have to choose between believing the world and all objective reality to be the work of 'a magnified non-natural man' (Anthropomorphism) or its being nothing more than a machine (Mechanomorphism). We are entering the Third Cosmology and that must give rise to the Third Ethic."

His 'Third Morality', bafflingly vague, has to do with expanding consciousness. It grows from "nucleations", promoted by a non-protein diet and Yoga exercises. There is something in all this "Eastern wisdom", the West is gradually coming to appreciate. But Heard has got it all mixed up with Bergson and bits of Jeans, with the chiropractics and the charlatans. There are inspirational tidbits in this pilaf of metaphysical mysticism. Here is a yearning soul earnestly striving toward better ways of living. He is sincere, almost convincing at times. But a little sadness comes to some of his admirers, with the feeling that he has published prematurely ideas in gestation. In the past, books have followed so rapidly that sometimes he has had to repudiate and retrace his steps.

ODDS AND ENDS

Aldous Huxley in his last novel, "Eyeless in Gaza", showed a serious undercurrent. However, his new book comes to his readers as something of a surprise, for this post-war sophisticate has gone back to religion. Ends and Means, An Inquiry into the Nature of Ideals and into the Methods Employed for Their Realization, Harper, 1937, gives his individual response to the old despairing cry, "What shall we do to be saved?" His answer is a brilliantly bewildering attempt to find "the Way and the Life". Penitent pilgrimage takes him to Buddha, Christ, and the mystics. He surveys the various roads to a better world through economic reorganization and through supernatural aid. About him he sees the horrors of a world organized for shameless lying. The efforts toward improvement now being made in various countries he rejects. Obsessed with what money and power have done, he is all for peace at any price. His plea is noble, illogical, unscientific, semi-hypnotic, self-abnegating, platitudinous and misinformed.

"Artistic creation and scientific research may be, and constantly are, used as devices for escaping from the responsibilities of life." How things came to be, the processes of evolution, don't interest him. His scientific curiosity dulled, he is overwhelmed by the great mysteries and the mystics and the atavistic physicists have debauched him.

The "goal of human effort" has been known Huxley believes from Isaiah to Marx. He accepts the responsibility for plotting the future course of the race. The 'meaning' of the world and the universe obsesses him. He has abandoned the human method, step by step improvement on error. He must see his heaven clear. He insists on knowing the end before he adopts any means.

EDDIES AND BACK CURRENTS

Change does not insure forward progress. There are eddies and back currents in any stream, and sometimes the current is so sluggish it is difficult to determine the direction.

In a time of confusion there are those who would play safe, and it is safer at the bottom of the hill when the winds blow. Moreover it is easier to go down than up. It is security we seek, not merely humans but all living things. Today from all the loud speakers, from the seats of learning, of finance and industry, the emotional cry is 'back to the past', 'retreat'.

MAN'S GREAT ADVENTURE

Man is well started on a great adventure, to explore, to learn about the world he lives in and the universe about him. The way has been long. The trail is faint to some. They doubt the course to take. There is dissension in camp. Some in panic want to retreat. Every expedition, exploring or military, always faces the problem of forward or back, advance or retreat,—and sometimes it is wise to seek safety first.

But there are always those who want to push ahead, to be first to scale the highest peak, to traverse the impossible desert or the impenetrable wilderness. That is the spirit that has made known to us the face of the earth and the fulness thereof. Some would abandon useless baggage brought from way back, and with greater agility achieve vantage points which they see ahead. Others, too weary to look ahead, regard their heavy burden as a sacred trust and to save it would turn back.

TURNING BACK OR STAGNATING

Looking back over the road we have come these millions of years, we find that more species and groups have turned back than have gone ahead. Of these fearful, forgotten, extinct creatures, who lost the impetus to go forward, all we know today is through their fossil remains in the geological strata.

In safe, secluded regions where conditions are unchanged as on the dark sea bottom, we find living fossils like the Lingula, "history's outstanding example of stagnation . . . unchanged today after five hundred million years. . . The tendency to degenerate appears from available records to be well-nigh universal", John Hodgdon Bradley tells us in "The Other Side of Progress", Yale Review, Spring, 1937. In other protected environments, on country estates barricaded behind non-taxable securities, we may find living fossils whose minds have been closed for a generation. Many university 'chairs' are filled with such antiquities.

REVERTS

It's the nature of organic life to die and leave no trace. Nothing ever changes unless something spurs it. Cosmic ray or sunspot energy may so affect the genes as to create new strains, which continue to change and adapt themselves. But all biological clocks run down unless wound up. The endocrinologist is finding a new way to do this, and may yet save the derelicts.

Boys come to college with the effervescence of an open bottle of champagne, and in an atmosphere of sophistication, snubbed and snobbed by supercilious Oxonians, they become limp, lassitudinous and frustrated. Instructors and professors, nipped and clipped, tired and deflated, teach them it is not good form to be enthusiastic, 'hot' about anything.

There are those who enthuse over 'hot' music. As they cool to this there is a tendency to revert in music, too. The present trend or fashion is to the eighteenth century incidental music composed for petty princelings of German states or for the priests of the medieval Church. The post-revolutionary Beethoven, Schubert's folk themes, the Victorian confidence of Ein Heldenleben, or the Wagnerian hopes of Valhalla, are by these effete defeatists left for the more vulgar.

In poetry, too, these tired self conscious esthetes would go back with T. S. Eliot to the 'eternal verities' of the medieval Church, or with Frost retreat from the world to the New England pastures and find satisfying the parsimonious Yankee philosophizing. The anemic and tired need rest in this time of confusion. Ahead all is noise and confusion, but there is quiet way back yonder.

In their youth these reverts may have adventured and fared on in a world of change and new ideas,—tried the new and then, in fear and waning vitality turned back to seek security. They long for the solace of the old beliefs and rituals. They are loud for the old moralities.

For millions of years species have turned back, degenerated, even become parasites. Life that had come out of the sea and adapted to varying land conditions, later reverted, whole groups, to become sea cows, seals, and whales. But this old story does not discourage Mother Nature. While the species is vital there are enough individuals who show mutation and adaptability to change to carry on. The biologist calls them sports. We humans refer to them as leaders and geniuses.

These human reverts often get a publicity wholly undeserved. This is nothing to be astonished about. Even the civilized American negro sometimes reverts to African Voodooism. Why then, be surprised when a burned out mind, once brilliant, reverts to the Church? Watch the head of the procession, not the deserters and stragglers, if you want to know where we are going.

INVERTS

Some, weary of the world, instead of running away turn in upon themselves and become introspectionists, metaphysicians or inverters. The possible number of combinations of neuro-fibrils in the cerebral cortex, has been calculated by neurologists to be something like thirty-three trillion. A metaphysician shut up inside his own skull can have a lot of fun playing the combinations.

Some of these inverters arrogantly claim that there is nothing real except what occurs in their own skulls. But if you compare the writings of the great metaphysicians of the past with the writings of the formerly intelligent inmates of a first class asylum, you won't find much to choose.

For more involved and meaningless experiments, look at the ammonites, fossil mollusks, once the flower of creation, now represented by that degenerate survivor, the chambered nautilus. For millions of years from the Silurian to the Cretaceous, Mother Nature played with the septum which divides the shell into chambers. From a simple plane this was convoluted, pocketed, each diverticulum extended into intricate dendritic proliferations, multiplying the surface of the septum hundreds of times and varying the design of the sutures in thousands of ways.

Don't be surprised then, that old Mother Nature takes a few cosmic moments to play with the infinite combinations possible in the synapses of the metaphysician's cortex. And don't blame the metaphysician any more than you would the ammonite. Both are examples of the useless complicated inversions of nature's playful moments.

An Einstein can tell of the most advanced and scientific thought in a small book. Great messages are simple. You can read their meaning clear.

PERFECTIONISTS

Some become disappointed, even bitter, that perfection is not attained. In his autobiography Ralph Adams Cram tells us of a farm boy who came to Boston, and happened into architecture. Business poor, he got a chance to build a church. Now he emulates the Gothic and the medieval, and resorts to Ortega, Spanish nobleman, Madariaga, Spanish intellectual and Berdyaev, Russian Orthodox religionist.

In The End of Democracy, Marshall Jones, 1937, Cram bewails its sad failure. In this loosely aggregated collection of addresses and essays there is much sound stuff and much that cannot be so characterized. He is equally ruthless with the 'proletariat' and the 'uncouth rich'. He would have us turn back to the thirteenth century and return to religion.

Albert Jay Nock, brilliant essayist, not pleased with government as it is, would have us do away with it all. Then there are the frustrated white Russians like Sorokin whose aristocratic paradise has been destroyed and who would have us turn back to authority of the middle ages.

ARRESTED DEVELOPMENT

In The Crisis of Civilization, Fordham University Press, 1937, Hilaire Belloc, shows evidence of early warping, bending the twig. He writes, "The culture and civilization of Christendom . . . was made by the Catholic Church . . . which made us . . . and formed the nature of the white world. In this crisis the only alternatives are recovery through the restoration of Catholicism or the extinction of our culture.

"The strategy required may be summed up in two titles: Print and Program . . . upon the Press must we concentrate for our chief effort; and by it in the main shall we succeed or fail. . . The falsehoods of official history whether anti-clerical or Protestant . . . are opposed to us, but the whole body of historical truth is with us. . .

"Well, it is not difficult to rewrite history and to present historical truth. . . After history, fiction. . . But fiction which is composed with . . . direct argument . . . is far less effective than fiction naturally inspired by a knowledge of what the Faith is and its effects upon Society. The intermediate department of historical fiction is here particularly valuable. . .

"Collegiate property happily we already have, the Great Orders are solidly established today on a strong economic basis. Let us work for their expansion and for their action not only in the educational but in the industrial field."

APOSTATES

Then there are those good men, valiant in their youth, whose arteries have hardened or who are victims of prostatitis, of whom Hooton remarks, "It is impossible to estimate, for example, to what extent the miseries of nations may have been enhanced by the vagaries of the enlarged prostates of their senile rulers, or by the climacteric mental disturbances of the latter's wives."

Still sadder is the case of Walter Lippmann. Once an ardent socialist, disciple of Brandeis, his early writing was so vital and suggestive that we forgave him, though he was a red. Perhaps this eventually effected in him the inferiority complex, common to all of us, for now wealthy and divorced he has become the representative of the House of Morgan at Harvard, the mouth-piece of Thomas Lamont to Arnold's 'thinking man',—America's hero, 'the business man'.

When a hard fighting, clear thinking liberal becomes tired, disillusioned, accepts the brass check and waxes fat, it is a sorry spectacle. But in the case of a brilliant radical thinker like Lippmann—well to diagnose his case economically and psychiatrically would involve indecent exposure.

Thurman Arnold, speaking of "Walter Lippman . . . one of the most learned economic pundits of the time", refers to his "emotional bias against the exercise of national power to solve national problems . . . pretending the separate states were like chemical laboratories".

The demagogue is an individualist and acts on his own private initiative. He works for possible future gains and profits, takes the risk like a man. Omar Khayyam's motto appeals,—"Take the cash and let the credit go."

"A 'plutogogue' is one who performs as the voice of the wealthy when the wealthy can no longer speak for themselves; e.g., Walter Lippman, Glenn Frank, Edward Bernays," said T. V. Smith, University of Chicago philosophy professor, at a round table conference of Williams College's Institute of Human Relations, April 29, 1937.

In The Good Society, Little, Brown, 1937, Walter Lippmann presents his apology. He makes a noble plea for respect for the inviolable personality of man as the foundation of any good society which "is not a capitalist but a corporate system". We must endure our present sufferings and sacrifices, he tells us, to preserve the spiritual essence in man. Something like this we seem to have heard from the princes of the church, from Hitler and from Mussolini.

It is foolish to plan for social progress because it is too difficult. Our only hope is the "free market" and the courts. That has been our hope in ages past. The positive measures he proposes and advocates seem very much like those of the present administration, but of course Lippman, like those he works for and appeals to, could carry through such things much better.

ATAVISTS

God created man in his own image, then man returned the compliment, Voltaire reminds us. Jeans has been announcing that God must have been a mathematician. The Rotarian tells us God was a Rotarian, while Bruce Barton who wrote "Nobody Knows God But Me" attempts a portrait of himself.

Lancelot Hogben in "Retreat From Reason" says, "Sir James Jeans's entertaining arithmetic is a by-product" of the observatories. "The scientist is invested with the dignity of priestcraft and reverts to his former role . . . when astronomer was also priest."

"The priestly accounts of the creation have fallen into discredit. So mysticism has to take refuge in the atom. The atom is a safe place not because it is small, but because you have to do complicated measurements and use underground channels to find your way there." (Hogben, "Mathematics for the Million").

These atavists, "speculators in the realm of physics like Eddington, Jeans, Millikan and Arthur Compton are guilty of . . . speaking as scientists for philosophy and religion . . . They are only theologians with a vengeance. . . a lurking menace". Dr. Max Schoen, professor of psychology, Carnegie Institute, in 'The Physicist's New Delusion', The Scientific Monthly, October, 1936, thus disposes of these "obscurantist and obstructionist" atavists.

BACK TO THE CHURCH

But these atavistic scientists are of great service to the Jesuitical writers who put forth disguised propaganda to turn us back to the Church. Notable among such is "European Civilization: Its Origin and Development", Oxford University Press, under the direction of Edward Eyre, to be complete in seven volumes, the first three of which were reviewed in the 20th edition of this Handbook, p. 85, and denounced as "propaganda of the most insidious kind put forth by those whose minds have been moulded, distorted in early years so that they can no longer view historic fact dispassionately".

"Political and Cultural History of Europe since the Reformation", Volume VI, published in 1937, is not even camouflaged propaganda. It makes clear why all education of youth must be in the hands of the Church (p. 1017), why all books must be written from the standpoint of the Church (p. 1019). "The Method of Natural Science" treats of the theory of evolution as a problem in philosophy. Without any understanding of the scientific method, it becomes easy to prove its improbability (p. 1155). "It is the function of the Catholic Church . . . to declare that a given law or action of the secular State is . . . to be disobeyed and even resisted, on the apostolic principle of obeying God rather than man" (p. 1340).

HUTCHINS IN RETREAT

The great menace to 'saving the world', to advancing civilization, is in those who would retreat to the past. The better the man that advocates it, the greater danger that he will start a stampede.

In a score of articles and speeches these past two years, President Hutchins has been advising retreat. It is not his ideas, his complaints constantly repeated, that are important, it is the emotional effect on those that are fearful and the aid and comfort that he brings to the medievalists.

The very simplicity of his proposition—the promise of relief from uncertainty and danger, the retreat to certitude, and the reliance on authority—attracts the timid. And there are plenty of 'em.

THE BOY WONDER

Robert Maynard Hutchins has for years been the "boy wonder" in education. At twenty-one he was a teacher in the now defunct Lake Placid School. Two years later, in 1923, he went to Yale as secretary of the University. From 1925 to 1929 he was lecturer and professor in the Yale Law School, and the last two years was head. Dynamic, he reanimated the moribund Law School, aligning himself with the more liberal elements and bringing new blood to the school, including the incisive W. O. Douglas, now SEC chairman.

Through speech and vision and action Hutchins did much to make Yale a center of creative thought. In helping to establish the Institute of Human Relations he became interested in the study of man in relation to his total environment. It was Hutchins who was influential in obtaining the necessary financing for the Institute from the Rockefeller Foundation.

CHICAGO A LIVE UNIVERSITY

So to Chicago at the age of thirty came this "stimulating human being who had made history at the Yale Law School in two short years of responsibility." —(Fortune). Hutchins found Chicago no somnolent, self-satisfied place such as he had left. After eight years there he said, "Compared with the University of Chicago, Yale is a boys' finishing school." And Chicago newspapers have always looked upon the university as a little "radical". Those who are not wholly in sympathy still speak of it as an "insane place", which means of course that it is alive and growing—thought currents may be confused, but are inspiring.

Hutchins had been preceded by Max Mason, now at the California Institute of Technology, who had given Chicago the forward look. In 1936 at Cornell, Mason said, "A new chapter in the history of science and of man is beginning as all the sciences are brought into coordinated attack on the vital problems of his future".

The Chicago faculty, too, is thoroughly alive, lacking the timidity of faculties in the older universities. Here are men who dare to speak out. In the social sciences are T. V. Smith, philosopher, legislator; Charles E. Merriam, economist interested in public affairs; Harold Lasswell, daring, clear minded writer.

HUTCHINS THE DYNAMIC

Before he assumed the presidency, Hutchins said to the students, "My view of university training is to unsettle the minds of young men, to widen their horizons, to inflame their intellects."

How could Hutchins, the dynamic, well integrated, unquenchable, irresistible, incisive, bold young man, plunged into this new and live environment, be brought to such a state that he turns back to medievalism?

The trustees could not "forecast the outcome of his intellectual friendships. Had they been able to read his horoscope they might have been frightened of the turmoil to come," Fortune ventures in an article on the University of Chicago (Dec. 1937).

THE THREE FATES

To three men, who had been on Everett Dean Martin's People's Institute program in New York City, Fortune ascribes great influence upon Hutchins—Richard McKeon, Columbia Spinozist and medievalist, Scott Buchanan, philosopher and mathematician, and Adler.

Hutchins invited these three men to join the Chicago faculty. McKeon came as visiting professor in history, later to be made professor of Greek and Dean of the Division of the Humanities. Buchanan was appointed visiting professor of liberal arts, as the philosophy department refused to accept him. Adler they accepted, but disliked him for "trying to impose immutable principles of metaphysics, as taken from medieval schoolmen, upon the university." To avoid further internecine conflict he was transferred to the law school with a "blue sky" professorship in the philosophy of law.

The first break came with Buchanan leaving to be dean at the derelict St. John's College, Annapolis, where an Adler-Hutchins curriculum is to bring "a revival of the ancient purposes of education . . . to get away from present liberal arts courses, which are dreary because they are just a mass of history and social science". The president is this fellow Stringfellow Barr, drawn by Hutchins from the University of Virginia to Chicago. The seniors must prove that they know forward and backward the 126 "best books of ancient and modern thought" from Plato to Marx. "The books which Mr. Stringfellow Barr is going to feed his students," Sinclair Lewis remarks, would be "a full cultural fare . . . for a hermit", surmising that "such exotic dishes as Apollonius' 'Conics' and Bonaventura's 'On the Reduction of the Arts to Theology' . . . Mr. Barr and his prophet, President Hutchins, quote lightly at bridge games."

MISUNDERSTANDING THE CLASSICS

A classicist, specialist in Plato, John A. Rice, president of Black Mountain College, in Harper's, May, 1937, apologizing for Hutchins, writes, "To nothing has reverence been paid more stupidly than to the classics. We do not read them as tracts for the times, which is what most of them were, but as distillations of pure reason, and we play the game of matching one abstraction against another until all meaning is drowned in a sea of words. . . .

"The American is now where the Greek was when he began to be something; the president of the University of Chicago, in a recent encyclical in Harper's, would have us begin with Aristotle, when the Greek began to be nothing. The sure sign of beginning decay was his preoccupation with grammar and rhetoric, and the final pouring of the mold of logic."

Plato, reporting on Socrates' talks, twisted them to suit his own homosexual, decadent outlook, to bolster up his own aristocratic class and era that was passing and was soon wiped out. Plato was feted, and failed.

"The Greek thinkers had had little in the way of authority on which to build," James Harvey Robinson writes in "The Human Comedy", "and no inconsiderable number of them frankly confessed that they did not believe that such a thing could exist for the thoroughly sophisticated intelligence."

AN EVIL INFLUENCE

Mortimer J. Adler, of New York birth, and product of its public school system, graduated from Columbia in '23, took his doctorate in '28, was instructor at Columbia and lecturer at the People's Institute until 1929—and is not directly connected with the famous Felix and Alfred Adler families. At Columbia he was, like Hutchins, interested in the psychological background of the law of evidence. John Erskine's course, the "Classics of the Western World", influenced him with the idea that "human wisdom had advanced relatively little in modern times".

As a psychologist Adler is more of a philosopher than a scientist. His latest book, under the intriguing, but as applied to the book, meaningless title, What Man Has Made of Man, Longmans, Green, 1937, is "A Study of the Consequences of Platonism and Positivism in Psychology". Sidney Hook, professor of philosophy at New York University, in The Nation, April 9, 1938, reviewing this book rebukes him for his "ill-concealed arrogance" toward "contemporary science and modern philosophy", the "assumptions that are coolly begged", and for his "unhistorical version of Aristotle". He leaves the poor man not a leg to stand on and not much to sit on.

Adler's befuddlement is in itself intriguing to those given to metaphysical reversion. They are imposed upon, too, by his erudition. His notes equal the text in volume. We find such sapient phrases as "organic forms which are called souls not minds" (flip flaps not flub dubs). For one of his race and training to turn to neo-Thomism might indicate profound physiological as well as psychological change.

Hutchins seems to have come increasingly under the dominating influence of Adler. Maude Phelps McVeigh, President Hutchins' wife, a talented artist, worked with and published in conjunction with Adler the volume on "Diagrammatics", 1932, which she illustrated.

By himself Adler would be relatively harmless and would attract little attention. But his medievalistic and ecclesiastic ideals superimposed upon Hutchins' orderly modern ideas and dynamic personality, have produced a strange hybrid. There has resulted a state of affairs which many close at hand, psychiatrists and classicists alike, diagnose as unsound, sick, a situation which has become a menace and cannot continue. As Fortune puts it, "metaphysics is battling against metabolism."

AUTHORITARIAN SANCTION

The Pope is in agreement with Hutchins, as are Mussolini and Hitler. The fascists recruit from good men spent, scared, and in retreat. If Hutchins can send more into retreat and reduce the "miscellaneous and variegated" student population to conformity and uniformity, that is meat for the fascists.

For Hutchins "the truth is everywhere the same. Hence, education should be everywhere the same." Mark Twain put it, "the ancients stole all our thoughts from us." Aristotle would not agree with Hutchins.

Hutchins is looking for authoritarian sanction. The Church is always ready to receive into its bosom those who would avoid the confusion of this world. In the Catholic Educational Review, P. W. Browne, of the Catholic University of America, notices that Hutchins quotes Cardinal Newman after he had gone back to the Church, and endorses Hutchins' statement that if we knew the thought of the great thinkers of Greece and Rome and of the Middle Ages, "our people would not fall so easily a prey to the latest nostrums in economics, politics, and education".

EDUCATION'S KEYNOTE

"Will American higher education take its keynote from the movement toward the study of good books which President Hutchins has started at Chicago?" Fortune asks.

No, not for long will we accept Hutchins' "good books" as a complete and balanced ration. Those ancient classics include some earnest attempts of men, many of whom, as Rice remarks, "were not educated men", to face the problems of their time and to solve them bravely. But Hutchins' "good books" include political documents of no import to-day, a good deal of myth for the credulous, and some pornography not current.

Education must take its keynote from related facts, actualities that influence today, realities that we must face. Facts about the C.I.O., for example, will be meaningless without understanding of what brought it into existence—labor spies, 'speed-ups', 'stretch-outs', tear gas, arsenaled factories. If education in this country fails to bring us into true relations with reality, then our civilization and culture will go under, and should—as have twenty-two other civilizations that Toynbee considers in his thirteen volume "Study of History". And anthropologists know many more cultures that have passed.

FACING THE MUSIC

If America is to go forward, education must face the music with all its modern cacophonies. We must find among "the latest nostrums in economics, politics, and education" what there is of value and worth. Those who make the new discoveries will command the future.

Meantime Hutchins has his lucid intervals, his periods of return to his own sane self. As late as June 1937, addressing the students Convocation Day, (where was Adler?) he said, "I hope that you will never have a 'philosophy of life'. As I understand this phrase it means that one who says he has a philosophy of life has got himself adjusted to his environment. He is now prepared to compromise on any issue at any time. Injustice is all right. Brutality is all right. Fraud and deception are all right. The only thing that is not all right is something that endangers the security of the individual in question, or that threatens his income, or damages his reputation. Peace in a vegetable sense and prosperity in a material sense are the aims of one who talks about his philosophy of life. . . .

"There is some justification for the saying that society either corrupts its best men or kills them. . . . If you begin to compromise, if your courage oozes when it costs something to fight, if you say, 'Leave well enough alone', or 'Don't rock the boat', or 'I have a philosophy of life', then you will be lost to yourselves and to your country.'

WHAT'S THE MATTER WITH HUTCHINS?

But Hutchins may not be unredeemable. If he could only get away from his medievalists, if Adler could be sent off on a sabbatical, if Hutchins could get time to read some good modern books, he might come out right side up, face forward. He is a better man, and a more serious menace, than is here revealed. The purpose here is not to praise or bury, but to confute those who claim his defeatism is incurable, and to point the way.

Let him read some of the new books that may be considered great at some later time. Alfred Machin's latest, the result of patching together the fragmentary twenty million year record of our ancestors, revealed by the diggers, gives new ideas on the origin of our moralities. Let him read R. R. Schmidt, who has portrayed the past million years of man's story so intimately that we learn something of the development of art and the soul, the esthetic and the spiritual side of man.

If he would read Korzybski's "Science and Sanity", product of a great mind bent on discovering order amid chaos, he would know better the semantic difficulties that beset him in juggling with "principles" and "fundamentals", and avoid his metaphysic as he would an emetic. He would discover a way through science to sanity, perhaps a new way to salvation for our troubled race.

For divertissement let him take the "Symbols" and "Folklore" of Thurman Arnold, intellectual giant of the Yale Law School. Let him dawdle with Hooton among the "Apes, Men, and Morons", that he may better distinguish between those he meets. For wit, wise and stimulating, let him consort with that mathematical jester, past-president of the Mathematical Association of America, E. T. Bell, in his "Search for Truth."

These are books by men who have command of fields of knowledge too little known to President Hutchins, about things unknown to Aristotle and Thomas Aquinas, that reveal lines of action ahead, points of vantage to be won. To get their vision is to turn retreat into advance, to be filled with enthusiasm to move forward.

No book is fundamental that does not deal with the fundamental problem that has long agitated the world, "What's ahead?" And if we are to have understanding, it helps to have some knowledge of the road over which we have come during the last million years.

These are recent books, not for the ordinary man, but for men of unusual intellect, like Hutchins, who are starving for the vitamins of new ideas, who yearn for new vision.

FASCIST TENDENCIES

Both fascism and communism are bugaboos, scare words. To some fascism means persecuting the Jews. To others it means brutal methods. The word comes from the bundles of rods, fasces, bound about the axe carried by the lictors of ancient Rome. They were not merely symbols of office but implements for exacting implicit obedience. On United States postoffices and other government public buildings, architects have stuck the fasces in their barren-mindedness as ornament, not prophesy.

Fascism remains implicit obedience to centralized authority. Authoritarianism, retreat to the past, is justified when a people are so confused and scared that they are willing to give up their liberty for safety.

FEAR AND FASCISM

Herbert Hoover on his return from Europe is reported in Life, April 11, 1938, as saying:

"Fear by nations of one another, fear by governments of their citizens, fear by citizens of their governments and the fear of people everywhere that general war is upon them again; fourteen nations with 240,000,000 people, have adopted notions of Fascism. And Fascism has demonstrated a way to fool all the people all the time—by suppression of all criticism and free expression." In a democracy as Lincoln remarked, you can't fool all the people all the time, and Gracie Allen puts it you can't fool some of the people some of the time. But we are learning to fool most of the people most of the time.

The roots of fascism go back to the intensification of nationalism,—in Germany to the after effects of the war. "The starvation period of Central Europe due to the blockade and its criminal extension during the period of wrangling over the spoils of war shows the effect of insufficient nutrition upon the development of the body. Apprentices in Vienna, measured in 1919 and 1921" showed a difference in height of up to 3 centimeters and weight up to 3 kilograms, says Franz Boas, in his "The Mind of Primitive Man".

Starved and surrounded by enemies, with Senegalese soldiers quartered upon them by the French, the Germans had little liberty to sacrifice. Hitler, the poor paper hanger, supported by the industrialists, has become the puppet hero. The century long process of unifying the German people, begun by Napoleon and Bismarck, goes on.

Italy, broken by the war, humbled by the great debacle of Caporetto, seemed contemptible to the great powers. Mussolini stuck out his chest—youth did likewise. He inspired confidence, stimulated their patriotism and transformed the Italian people. In ten years he had “dewopped the wops”. He, too, is the mythical hero behind whom greater forces “in reality turned Italy back to ancient systems of monarchism and ecclesiasticism”, as Eugene J. Young tells us in “The Built-Up Legend of Mussolini” in his “Looking Behind The Censorships”. Italy, too, is still in the process of making a nation out of what were scattered populations and petty principalities.

AMERICAN ROOTS

Much that the dictators adopted and adapted to achieve their success had American origins. The summer camp originated in New England fifty to seventy years ago. In 1937 the Soviets bravely announced they sent to summer camp over 25,000,000 children, ten times as many as in America where the idea originated. The idea of a military school for boys got its start at Norwich, Vermont in 1819 and spread all over the country. There was nothing of this kind in Italy until a century later when Mussolini adopted our New England and American ideas. Boy Scout methods developed in England and America have been widely copied or adapted by all the dictators.

Other American methods, not so admirable,—were those used on conscientious objectors during the war, the barbed wire enclosure for even the Boston Symphony Orchestra conductor. Our current horrible and sadistic methods of suppressing unpopular racial or religious minorities have recently been illustrated in the picture magazines. The ‘third degree’ was developed by our politically dominated American police at a time when in stabilized Europe police methods were on a higher, professional, well disciplined basis.

FASCIST METHODS

Many of these modes of torture and suppression have been adopted by Fascist dictators. They have not gone so far as to use the water cure which Americans use to pacify the Philipinos or the blow torch on negroes in the south. Their use of castor oil and the steel whip may seem to them more humane.

All the dictators have brought to every child full opportunities for physical development, interesting group activities, summer life at the seashore or in the mountains, and for older youth, outdoor life and activities, hiking, marching, swimming, skiing, mountain climbing, perhaps to a degree shared by no other people.

But cannon fodder that is nearly physically perfect is not enough. The morale of an army is even more important than its marching ability. There is less of broken youth. There is less need for the psychiatrist. The equality of cannon fodder is not only better physically, but of superior morale. The dictator knows his job, how to mould and build youth to conform to his ideal, to turn out a crop of first class cannon fodder. His very existence depends upon their success in this.

FASCIST TENDENCIES IN AMERICA

Those impatient of the democratic process, alarmed at the demands of labor, dissatisfied with the administration of the government and justice, would gladly see an authoritarian regime if they might control. Those who like to call themselves communists would gladly see a dictator like Stalin in order to bring disaster to what they hate and advance what they stand for.

Fear, insecurity, willingness to sacrifice liberties, is necessary before fascist authoritarianism can prevail. Then there must be a puppet hero for the populace to worship and he must stand for a national policy that has long been retarded.

Financial and aristocratic elements have been behind the forces in Italy and Germany, as Eugene Young brings out in "Looking Behind The Censorships". And such forces have not been idle in this country.

UNIFYING THE NATION

We have, too, a national trend long retarded, a tendency toward a 'more perfect union' which is the historic driving force in both Germany and Italy. As yet we have no national government. We are still a union of states. The original club of thirteen has admitted additional members.

A national government is opposed by lawyers and industrialists as they oppose federal licensing of corporations. Industrialists find it easier to control a state rather than a national legislature so 'state rights' are appealed to. Lawyers would lose their fattest fees. Before the American Bar Association President Stinchfield, horifically prophesied, "We shall have government from Washington covering a territory of 130 million people". Thurman Arnold in his "Folklore of Capitalism" adds "The superficial observer might have thought that this was one of the objectives for which the Civil War was fought and therefore had its good points."

IN SCHOOL AND COLLEGE

This is the only country in the world which does not have a national system of education. But the Federal Government spends about $160,000,000 yearly for so-called educational purposes,—statistics, Alaska, R.O.T.C.,—and $45,000,000 for vocational training which has become almost a racket.

The Federal Government did a 'land office business' giving away its land and natural resources, while they lasted. It gave to every school system, to railroads and individuals, and it gave away water power to corporations until the Water Power Act of 1923.

With no national education our oldest and purest blooded citizens in the southern mountains remain illiterate, our negro and tenant farmers neglected. But something more than 17,000 school boards and trustees in their wisdom determine who shall teach and what, while bits of graft stick to fingers.

Hitler only recently suppressed private schools in Germany and there is still an American school in Munich. In Italy there are many American schools. But Oregon, Michigan, and other states passed laws, suppressing all private schools, which the supreme court declared unconstitutional. Professor Thomas H. Briggs of Teachers College in his Inglis Lecture in 1932, advocated the suppression of all private schools.

The Harvard Teachers Union claims that President Conant's restriction of the admission of students is following the fascist pattern of Germany. While disease remains it would seem that we could at least use more medically trained. For "American Roots of Fascism" see Yankee, March, 1938.

WHAT WE DO TO OUR CHILDREN

In full faith that we are doing the right thing we are this year putting some 33,000,000 young people through the educational mill with the aid of 1,020,000 teachers and at an average expense for the year of $102 for each child. The tax payers complain as they have for a century that that is too much to spend in equipping a child for life. Well, it was only $10 per white child in Mississippi and only $5.45 for a negro child, for the whole year.

LESS LAUGHTER, MORE GROANS

But the numbers of children are falling off. There are a million less in the elementary public schools now than at the peak. Catholic parochial schools as yet show no falling off, for the birth rate is better maintained. Only this year have we waked up to what the decreasing birth rate means as explained in this Handbook for 1935-36. The shortage will soon reach the high schools and in another decade the colleges.

It was during the years of our bounding prosperity that the decline was most marked. It was then that we were most careless of our children. Infant mortality ran disgracefully high, not from ignorance or poverty, but from heedlessness, rugged individualism.

EDUCATIONAL PROCESSES

In the home and school, we impart to children the folkways, folklore, beliefs, tabus, foreboding and fears of their elders. We claim that we are transmitting the heritage of the race but the long story of mankind and of life through the ages remains unknown to most of our high school and college graduates. We stuff children with details of recent historical knowledge which fails to give them any understanding of the story of man.

'Mental discipline', 'transfer of thought', were the catchwords of a generation past. Now we know that we can't make a billiard player on the tennis court, and that training in book-keeping won't make a man honest. But we do warp him with a set of beliefs and attitudes that colors all he sees and hears. We do train him so that association tracts and whole sections of his brain atrophy.

FILLING ASYLUMS AND PENITENTIARIES

Psychiatrists, like the Menningers, say it doesn't matter what we teach, it is the result on the pupil that counts, that determines mental health or delinquency. And they are justified in view of the increasing percentage of the school house product that goes to the 'bughouse' or the 'big house'.

We are just beginning to learn a little about what these educational processes have done and the more we know the less faith we have in them. The trouble has been that teachers have been magnifying their own egos, not the child's. Principle, conviction, has been so strong with us that we have been unconscious of the result we were producing inside the child's skull. Good intent, conscientiousness, were our justification, and so we paved the road to hell for many a youth.

"Frustration is the one thing characteristic of the present generation" and it is due to our conscientious teachers living up to their principles and philosophies. This was explained in "The Crime of Teaching" by Porter Sargent, Yankee, October, 1937.

THE HARM WE DO

In our earnest desire to provide better education for our children we have put implicit faith in 'book larnin' and the school teacher. We are beginning to realize that our grandfathers on the old New England farm with three months of 'deestrick' school did better. Their's was a training in initiative and community activities in close contact with nature and actuality. See "Education On The Old New England Farm" by Porter Sargent, Yankee, September, 1937.

The Carnegie Foundation has just published an elaborate monograph on a ten-year investigation of education in Pennsylvania, at a cost of $3,000,000, which shows that many boys knew more before they entered college than after they graduated.

We are just learning that instead of teaching reading we create a distaste for it, that our best writers have never been taught, that examinations are foolish, home-work harmful, language a semantic mire out of which grow psychoses.

From our schools and colleges youth is thrust "afraid into a world he never made". Housman felt it as fate. It is for us to remove the cause. Thomas Hardy's first poem, 1866, "A Young Man's Epigram on Existence" has the same burden as a long letter received within a few months from the graduate of one of our best private schools which has a complete and perfect philosophy,—

"A senseless school, where we must give
Our lives that we may learn to live!
A dolt is he who memorizes
Lessons that leave no time for prizes."

PHILOSOPHY OF EDUCATION

There was a time in the nineties when educators had implicit confidence that there was a 'philosophy of education', that there were 'principles', 'fundamentals' from which to start, and one inevitable road to follow.

Since then the emphasis has changed. We have heard a great deal about a 'science of education'. An enormous amount of time has been spent on 'educational research'. Able, beefy, brainy men have spent endless hours devising puzzles for children to do and timing them on them. All these ideas, of course, developed within the skulls of adults.

PROPAGANDA CAMOUFLAGED

'Philosophy of education' is a large phrase worthy of semantic analysis. Once it was fashionable for everybody to have his personal philosophy. Every field of activity is supposed to set up a philosophy. But none parade their philosophies more blatantly than the educationalist. Most of these educational philosophies will not stand any close analysis or scrutiny.

Looking through educational publications for the phrase, one finds that often the meaning is made clearer if for educational philosophy, you substitute plan, program, or propaganda. The Educational Policies Commissions has wisely substituted 'policy' for 'philosophy', but in the report in their bulletin, October 15, 1937, on policy-making in the States, we find in Florida and Nebraska it is called 'program'; in Hawaii and Oklahoma 'policy'; in Kansas 'philosophy'; in Michigan 'coordinating and planning'; in Minnesota 'problem'.

An article on "The Need for a Philosophy of Education" in the November, 1937, Journal of the National Education Association, boils down to the idea that if we have one, we don't need to worry, we will only have to defend it.

Such an educational philosophy is a crutch to lean on or a screen behind which to hide while we put across the ideas which we think must prevail, while we put over on the young the program which we think they should be put through.

RETREAT TO THE PAST

But too often philosophy is an excuse for inherited or second hand ideas or prejudices, a defense for what they think are beliefs, but which are really hunches, handouts, or inherited attitudes.

Those who hold forth on philosophy of education usually know least about the physiological processes of growth involved. It is a concealment of ignorance.

Korzybski remarks in "Science and Sanity", "Most 'philosophers' gamble on terms which have no definite single meaning, and so, by cleverness in twisting, can be made to appear to mean anything desired . . . Many 'philosophers' have played an important and . . . sinister role in history. At the bottom of any historical trend, we find a certain 'philosophy', a structural implication cleverly formulated by some 'philosopher'."

Michael Demiashkevich's "Introduction to the Philosophy of Education", which is propaganda for the "essentialist" school so-called, a reversion from the forward course, has had an effect. As a teacher at the George Peabody Teachers College and the Harvard Summer School, his doctrine of defeatism and return to the past, his glorification of medievalism, has been adopted as a program in modern forward-moving schools and has affected the attitude of school masters in important positions.

"Philosophy of Education" was the chief topic of the convention of eighteen Catholic universities and colleges in New York, December, 1937, which was attended by Mortimer J. Adler, the Hebrew-Catholic-Thomist who has so influenced Hutchins. "The Philosophy of Education of St. Thomas Aquinas", to which so many are reverting now, was the subject of a paper read by the Rev. Dr. Robert Slavin, O.P., of the Catholic University of America. It was shown to be "a derivation from his theological and philosophical system".

WINDOW DRESSING

Walter Crosby Eells, director of the Cooperative Study of Secondary School Standards, in The Educational Record, January, 1938, reports on "Educational Philosophy of Schools: Theory vs. Practice". He quotes Sir John Adams, British educator, who "argued that 'the principles' and 'the practices' of education as taught in teacher training institutions were like oil and water—they hardly ever mixed. Often, indeed, 'never the twain will meet' . . .

"The philosophy of education held by the administrators and staffs" of the two hundred schools studied shows little relation between philosophy or theory and actual practice. It is all charted to show that they are more progressive in their philosophy than in their practice. Their philosophy is a screen, a window dressing, behind which they follow traditional practice.

"We say that we have a philosophy of education and from that source we derive the reasons why we should give certain types of curricula and certain courses of study and contents thereof", writes President Raymond A. Kent of the University of Louisville in "Mirrors of Education", The Educational Record,

July, 1937, and he cites the absurd teaching of "mathematics and Latin, originally inserted into the curriculum . . . as tools to be used by persons who were to enter specific types of occupations".

ESCAPE FROM EXPERIENCE

"To escape from the restrictions of science, our contemporaries write philosophies of education", writes W. C. Ruediger in Educational Method, reviewing A. Gordon Melvin's The New Culture, Reynal and Hitchcock, 1937. Of our traditional fields of study, the author tells us, "we must discard the organization which cast our world since Aristotle into such various logical or static forms as astronomy, mathematics, history, etc. . . This type of organization is outmoded; it should become for the purposes of the school entirely extinct. The educational luncheon must be served in a new set of courses with food adequate for all."

Colonel Parker's one hundredth anniversary was celebrated by tributes from prominent educators in Progressive Education. As able and progressive a philosopher as Kilpatrick asks "What is philosophy?" and one gathers from his remarks that it is what he describes as "enduring principles" by which he means "conception" and "relationships grown out of experience" that are "least liable to change", by which he means those that have changed least. For what does he know about future changes? He is merely saying that philosophy is what you deduce from experience. Well, let us call it that and be done with philosophy,—the comforter, the pacifier, the teething ring of the weak and whimpering.

Flora J. Cooke, devoted disciple, writes on Parker's "social philosophy". His philosophy was never to dodge an issue, however unpleasant, but always to face reality.

MORE TEXTS

The educational presses are turning out each year new books from the pens of college teachers, on the philosophy, program and methods of education. Some follow the mores, the folklore, the customs of this American branch of western European civilization. But increasingly books appear which have a biological or psychological basis. That is, the statements, the practices are such that they could be tested by others, in other times, in other climes, and proved in other words. There is a tendency toward the scientific attitude and method. But it has not gone far.

Most of these texts still begin with a long story about the systems of education that have been set up in the past, systems that had little organic consistency, little relation to actuality, but were evolved within the skull of some man. Of course the man, Plato or Pestalozzi, was a product of his time. We live in a new world, a world in which man has progressed in a hundred years at such an accelerated rate that his accomplishment, his change of view, his change of base, his new acquisitions, material and immaterial, exceed all that he had accomplished previously.

One of the best of these texts is Secondary School Teaching, Ginn & Co., 1937, by J. G. Umstattd, Associate Professor of Secondary Education, Wayne University, and Supervisor in Secondary Education, Detroit Public Schools. It shows awareness and aliveness to the world we live in. Moreover his attitude is thoroughly modern. Individual differences seem to him important, and method aside from material futile.

Secondary Education, D. Appleton-Century Co., 1937, is by Dr. Fred Engelhardt, Professor of Educational Administration, University of Minnesota and Dr. Alfred Victor Overn, Professor of Education, University of North Dakota. Its sub-title, "Principles and Practices", tells the story. However it gives some view of what has been done recently in foreign lands, and it shows aliveness to social studies and natural science and reflects the broadened attitude of educational thought toward the fine arts and practical arts. The authors recognize "the evolutionary processes that have brought schools to their present state of development".

Secondary Education for Youth in Modern America, 1937, is a report of the American Youth Commission of the American Council on Education, prepared by Harl R. Douglass, Professor of Secondary Education at the University of Minnesota. He recognizes that "the approach to a philosophy of secondary education must be on the basis of the relationship of the schools to the rest of society". This resumé has been prepared to give "both meaning and support to a statement of the philosophy which seems most practical and effective in the light of our times and ideals".

The Challenge of Education, McGraw-Hill, 1937, is a symposium by the members of the education faculty of Stanford University. A realistic modern attitude toward the bearing of sociology, psychology, and biology on education is evidenced, against a background of the usual teachers training courses.

The Effective General College Curriculum as Revealed by Examinations is published by the Committee on Educational Research, by the University of Minnesota Press, 1937. Twenty of the faculty contribute. Students were leaving after the sophomore year. The investigation shows "The effective curriculum is the student's curriculum. It is not the instructor's curriculum. The latter is important only as it affords a stimulus to the student to achieve his own growth and a guide to his educational development." Plenty of evidence is provided that you can't decide in advance, as President Hutchins thinks, on what is good for a student.

PHILOSOPHIC FETTERS

If we adults had been educated, trained, conditioned, environmenting, by all-wise, all-seeing parents and pedagogues, we would then naturally be much better adapted to meet the things that worry and trouble us now, that we don't understand, that frustrate us.

Generations of loving parents and conscientious pedagogues with the best intent have striven zealously to follow the best traditions, to inculcate principles, sure of their fundamentals and philosophy. And it has resulted in frustrating youth and has reduced the world to its present state.

PHILOSOPHIC HERESY

"Philosophy is a stage in intellectual development, and is not compatible with mental maturity. In order that it may flourish, traditional doctrines must still be believed . . . there must also be a belief that important truths can be discovered by merely thinking, without the aid of observation."

Bertrand Russell in the Atlantic, February, 1937, in an article on "Philosophy's Ulterior Motives", uttered this shocking heresy. Most Atlantic readers had believed that philosophy was the ultimate, that philosophers were the final repositories of the world's wisdom, that they held the eternal verities in their possession, that they told scientists where they got off . . . Philosophers still attempt to keep us under their thumb. According to Mortimer Adler, as Sidney Hook puts it in The Nation, April 9, 1938, "scientists may explain the world in a descriptive sense, but they cannot understand it."

Russell goes on, "Philosophy has been defined as 'an unusually obstinate attempt to think clearly'; I should define it rather as 'an unusually ingenious attempt to think fallaciously' . . . To the completely unintellectual, general doctrines are unimportant; to the man of science, they are hypotheses to be tested by experiment; while to the philosopher they are mental habits which must be justified somehow if he is to find life endurable. . . . Capacity to believe that the 'laws of thought' have comforting political consequences is a mark of the philosophic bias. Philosophy, as opposed to science, springs from a kind of self-assertion. . . . If our scientific knowledge were full and complete, we should understand ourselves and the world and our relation to the world." Then philosophy would have nothing to do.

Stuart Chase in his "Tyranny of Words" reports, "Another matter which distressed me was that I found it almost impossible to read philosophy . . . just a haughty parade of Truth, Substance, Infinite, Absolute, Over-soul, the Universal, the Nominal, the Eternal". Now that Chase has discovered the new technique of semantics, he writes, "Many of the questions asked about social and philosophical subjects will be found to be meaningless."

A NONSENSE GAME

Thirty years ago, that colossal personality John Jay Chapman had penetrated the bunk. In a letter March 17, 1897, to William James, he wrote, speaking of Josiah Royce, "I never heard a man talk so much nonsense . . . The inroads of Harvard University upon his intelligence . . . have been terrible. . . I know you would say that it's mere philosophy and not to be taken seriously; but these things do have some influence sometimes." On another occasion, apropos of Royce, he wrote, "There is no such thing as philosophy. But there are such things as philosophers. A philosopher is a man who believes there is such a thing as philosophy, and who devotes himself to proving it." And again April 25, 1909, "Modern Philosophy since Kant is a game and so many thousands are in the conspiracy that almost anyone may be tempted to throw a few louis d'ors on the table as he passes through the gambling hell. With three years' practice I could play it myself."

Henry Adams, when Bergson's "Creative Evolution" was first published, referred to it as "the most widely known among the very latest efforts of metaphysicians to defend their conceptions against the methods of physics. From the beginnings of philosophy and religion, the thinker was taught by the mere act of thinking, to take for granted that his mind was the highest energy of nature."

MYTHOLOGY AND PHILOSOPHY

"We sometimes forget that systems of philosophy are the products of old age; and we have failed to follow the Socratic direction to teach the young how to become, not how to be, philosophers". This is John Rice apologizing in Harper's, May, 1937, for Hutchins' back-to-philosophy cry.

These philosophers "feast upon shadows in the prevailing famine of substance", E. T. Bell tells in "Debunking Science". They eschew experience, refuse to make inquiries, remain uninformed about scientific research, assert that the correct procedure is known only to supermen like themselves and that they are above criticism.

These old men pass on their versions of mythology, theology or philosophy, which Boaz, the anthropologist, tells us are merely different terms for the current shape of human thought. He quotes Lehmann, the German writer, "The character of a system of philosophy is, just like that of any other literary work, determined first of all by the personality of its originator . . . It bears the general marks of the period to which it belongs . . . It is influenced by the particular bent of philosophical thought of the period."

MODERN MEDIEVALISTS

Through Science to Philosophy, Oxford, 1937, is based on the Lowell Lectures of 1936 by Herbert Dingle, London astrophysicist. It is an exposition of the modern scientific method in the presence of Einstein's relativity and the quantum theory. He leads us on through a metaphysical treatment of "Words", "Knowledge, Truth, and 'Unobservables'", "Subjective and Physical Time", "Causality", "Indeterminacy and Free Will", to "The Universe" as a whole.

Dingle is an avowed solipsist, a sincere exponent of extreme subjectivism, considering his own "consciousness as the whole universe—including whatever of physical, mental, spiritual or other kind of being you regard as existing or capable of deluding me into thinking that it exists".

In apology for the somewhat confused state of knowledge and the incompleteness of his treatment, he cites a character in one of Gogol's books who spent much thought on the problem, "What would be the colour of elephants' eggs if elephants laid eggs?" One suspects that Dingle has not fully escaped the Aristotelian fetters, that he has some semantic difficulties, and he admits that he lacks the biological point of view.

In The Unity of Philosophical Experience, Scribner, 1938, Etienne Gilson of the University of Paris, one of the speakers at the Harvard Tercentenary, gives us a history of psychological failures, holding up Plato, Aristotle, and Thomas as the non-failures, the servants of "perennial philosophy", who attempted to "relate reality . . . to the permanent principles in whose light all the changing problems of science, of ethics, and of art have to be solved." Erudition is Gilson's middle name, but his last is Dogmatism.

MODERN PHILOSOPHERS

A Philosophy for a Modern Man, Knopf, 1938, by H. Levy, tends to counter the confusion of these medievalists. Heisenberg's Principle of Uncertainty is directly dealt with. The pessimistic conclusions of many writers on science, he shows by his method of 'isolates', are due to philosophical mistakes. His is a counter attack on the modern confusionists and a protection for the ordinary man against them.

Four Ways of Philosophy, Henry Holt, 1937, by Erwin Edman, professor of philosophy at Columbia, and dedicated to Justice Cardozo, is in substance the Henry Ward Beecher lectures of 1936 at Amherst. He reduces all philosophies to four perennial types,—those of “logical faith”, “social criticism”, “mystical insight” and “nature understood”.

“Philosophers are always arriving at conclusions, but there is no conclusion to philosophy . . . the end at which they arrive is determined by what they start with, and what philosophers start with is in turn determined by temperamental bias, by the circumstances of a social and political and religious tradition, by the particular points of social conflict or personal uncertainty which initiate the whole movement of their thought. . . Other men, other circumstances, other central problems, and other philosophies arise. . . The philosopher is always a mortal creature at a given place and juncture of time. . .

“Philosophy examined historically and psychologically is as much an activity of men as breathing, as much a skill as music . . . Philosophy has mistaken its function in arrogating to itself the notion that it is either a transcript of reality or a specific program for life. . .

“Many philosophers (and all transcendentalists) set great store by the compulsions of ‘logical necessity’. . . But it would be no whit less logically inevitable to infer, as Richards and Ogden point out in their ‘Meaning of Meaning’, that granted that all flubjubs are dingbats and that this is a flubjub this must be a dingbat. Whether flubjubs or dingbats exist has not been settled by the argument, nor what they are. But the argument is none the less formally sound.”

PHILOSOPHY AS POETRY

“Philosophy conceived as a wide and disciplined poetry, celebrating man’s origins, his vicissitudes and his objects of life, would clarify the question of progress in philosophy”, Edman believes. Chapman had written James thirty years before that “philosophy was only an inexpressive form of poetry and that you would end by teaching poetry if you make philosophy speak”.

Like poets, philosophers present their reflections on their experience of life and nature, many of them abstrusely and complexly, but Edman is able in simple language without technicalities to present these different philosophers sympathetically and understandingly. He recreates their moods and attitudes. His style suggests Santayana, his thought Dewey.

“‘To make the philosophy by which men live the philosophy by which they speak’ is a felicitous statement of a common program for all naturalistic and empirical philosophies. Psychology, sociology, and imaginative reconstruction then become the appropriate instruments for understanding philosophers who cannot make themselves clear to others", comments Sidney Hook in The Nation, January 8, 1938.

SOCRATES' LOVE OF WISDOM

The "new education" that Socrates stood for he called "philo-sophy", love of wisdom, which meant to him hatred of bunk. This love of wisdom had for its main task "to examine and reject" everything false that was commonly held. The methods of his new education, philo-sophy, consisted merely in asking for definitions for words like "justice", "courage", "piety", just as Thurman Arnold and Stuart Chase do today,—the real philosophers in the tradition of Socrates.

The last twenty years of his life Socrates devoted to "the exposure of ignorance in high places . . . Disclaiming all knowledge, he declared himself incompetent to teach . . . This humility naturally infuriated anyone who had been subjected to the deadly Socratic analysis and had been forced to realize his state of mental confusion. For it soon became clear that no reputation could survive a conversation with Socrates, the man who knew nothing."

Socrates didn't claim to teach anybody anything. He only helped people to question themselves. "He did not provide his hearers with new and interesting ideas, but like a midwife assisted the pregnant mind to bring forth its own truths. In the early dialogues of Plato we can watch 'the midwife' at work."

PLATO'S PERVERSION

The foregoing quotations are from Plato To-Day, Allen and Unwin, 1937, by R. H. S. Crossman, fellow and tutor of New College, Oxford. Originally radio talks, this book lacks the verbosity of most writings on Plato. He is paid to teach Plato, who wrote, but he has greater admiration for Socrates, who, like Christ and St. Francis, left nothing in writing but lives through the vividness of his personality.

Crossman does not dwell on Plato's foibles or perversions. He pictures him as a very human personality, an aristocrat, of a time and place, who belonged to a dying order and a dying nation and tried to save it. He outlines his plan for society, the philosopher kings, the administrators.

"Plato's philosophy is the most savage and the most profound attack upon Liberal ideas which history can show. It denies every axiom of 'progressive' thought and challenges all its fondest ideals. Equality, freedom, self-government—all are condemned as illusions."

WHY PLATO FAILED

Plato, he tells us, "busied himself with the problems of his fellow Greeks . . . In all that he tried to do for the Greeks he failed. Why then should people in this modern world bother to read what he had to say?"

In an extended analysis of "Why Plato Failed" he explains his relations to his time and his inability to adjust himself to inevitable forces which he failed to face, turning backward to "defend a status quo in which the seeds of revolution are watered by the self-righteous opposition of the educated classes to all forms of social change."

"The politicians on each side were equipped with high-sounding slogans: the Left claimed that they were the champions of the constitutional rights of the people, the Right that they stood for aristocracy, law, and order."

WHAT PLATO DID TO SOCRATES

"It is Socrates, not Plato, whom we need", Crossman tells us. Socrates was "the first man who really saw what intellectual integrity implied and yet preferred it to everything else. He was the spirit of research, incorruptible, intolerant of sham, greedy for every variety of human experience, insatiable in discussion, ironic yet serious. Such a spirit is generally intolerable to any well-organized community. The statesman . . . the priest . . . the professor . . . will all unite to suppress the free spirit . . . which respects no authority . . .

"Every established authority must resort to the most irrational of defences—force. There is no other weapon against the conscientious objector . . . Conscientious objection to prejudice and unreason . . . will have no simple answer to the questions of the hour.

"Regarding force as irrational, it will refuse to use it and ceaselessly demand that those who are prepared to do so should ask themselves precisely what their purpose and their motives are. The Athenian democracy had no answer to this question has the United States or England?, and so Socrates died. . .

"Socrates will always be compelled to die, his death will always be . . . condemned by succeeding generations, who see so easily in retrospect that truth is ultimately preferable to any established falsehood, however efficient it may be. Condemning the death of the historical Socrates, each generation kills its own."

PHILOSOPHY AND SCIENCE

Our Western philosophy is quite different from Chinese philosophy. We Nordics and Baltics, recently brought in contact with classic cultures and Oriental religions, have had our inferiority complex so enlarged that we have to excuse ourselves at every turn, we have to build screens and camouflages, and we call these philosophies, and get pleasure from contemplating life in distant worlds, or in chasing our mental tails. In extrovert Elizabethan times, when we were beginning to discover the world and gaining release from metaphysical fears, we sailed forth and singed the King of Spain's beard and felt "the world is mine oyster".

THE IMPORTANCE OF LIVING

Lin Yutang two years ago produced a beautiful and engaging picture of an ancient culture, reflecting the sweetest and deepest kind of patriotism. It was entitled "My Country and My People". No Westerner has yet written with as great depth of feeling, understanding, and sanity of his own people and country.

Now his The Importance of Living, Reynal and Hitchcock, 1937, has fortunately become a best seller. He presents what we 'Westerners' would call a 'philosophy of life'. But it is actually a way of avoiding the kind of philosophy we have been sampling and arriving at enjoyment. The great theme is that life is worth living and worth enjoying, without vain hope of future life, without excuse or apology for the present. He writes,

"Deprived of academic training in philosophy, I am less scared to write a book about it. Everything seems clearer and simpler for it. . . Courage seems to be the rarest of all virtues in a modern philosopher."

The Western philosophy is all to answer the questions "Why am I?" "How did I get this way?" and "Where do I go from here?" "What is the end of living and what is the purpose of life?" The Chinese never ask those questions. They live and die and explore the universe about them, unquestioning but exploring, discovering, appreciating, enjoying.

GREAT IS PHILOSOPHY

"According to empirical philosophy, science provides the only means we have for learning about man and the world in which he lives. Some have thought that this fact makes philosophy unnecessary. . . The elimination does rule out one kind of philosophy, namely, that which held that philosophy is a higher form of knowledge than the scientific kind, one which furnishes knowledge of ultimate higher reality," John Dewey said in "The Relation of Science and Philosophy as the Basis of Education", a paper read before the National Society for the Study of Education, February 26, 1938, at the Atlantic City meeting of the American Association of School Administrators, School and Society, April 9, 1938.

But, he added, "Given the most extensive and accurate system of knowledge, man is still faced with the question of what he is going to do about it and what he is going to do with the knowledge in his possession. . .

"Experimental philosophy is at one with the genuine spirit of a scientific attitude . . . Finally, the science and philosophy of education can and should work together in overcoming the split between knowledge and action, between theory and practice, which now affects both education and society, so seriously and harmfully."

IF IT'S SCIENCE

"Great is philosophy, for it is the synthesis of all knowledge, but if it is true philosophy it must be built upon science, which is tested knowledge", said Edwin Grant Conklin in his address as retiring president of the American Association for the Advancement of Science.

"Nowadays our philosophers are mathematicians. Their aim, if not their ambition, is not to explain, but to translate quantitatively the facts perceived by our conscience." (Du Noüy, "Biological Time").

"The only justification for our concepts and system of concepts is that they serve to represent the complex of our experiences; beyond this they have no legitimacy. I am convinced that the philosophers have had a harmful effect upon the progress of scientific thinking in removing certain fundamental concepts from the domain of empiricism, where they are under our control, to the intangible heights of the a priori," wrote Albert Einstein in "The Meaning of Relativity".

"Not all so-called 'philosophy' represents an episode of semantic illness," says Korzybski. "A few 'philosophers' really do important work. This applies to the so-called 'critical philosophy' and to the theory of knowledge or epistemology. This class of workers I call epistemologists, to avoid the disagreeable implications of the term 'philosopher'."

SOCIETY NEEDS SCIENCE

Science has made possible the society of today,—the great increase in the number of the human race, the possibility of their living not only on the surface of the earth but aggregated as they are in great communities. Society still needs science and more science. A symposium on "Science and Society" is announced to be held at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology in Cambridge, June 6, 1938. Some of the topics to be treated by invited speakers are "Science and Letters", "Bio-Technics and Architecture".

THE SCIENTIFIC REVOLUTION

"The human race has more and greater benefits to expect from the successful cultivation of the science which deals with living things, than from all the other sciences put together." This is quoted from Charles W. Eliot.

"The depression is a small price to pay if it induces us to think about the cause of the disorder, confusion, and insecurity which are the outstanding traits of our social life . . . our halfway and accidental use of science," says John Dewey. "It is incredible that the men who have brought the technique of physical discovery, invention, and use to such a pitch of perfection, will abdicate in the face of the infinitely more important human problem. . . The great scientific revolution is still to come. It will ensue when men collectively and cooperatively organize their knowledge to achieve and make secure human values."

SCIENCE AND EDUCATION

"Education . . . has hardly been touched by the application of science", Dewey tells us in his "The Supreme Intellectual Obligation". What is needed, he says, is not scientific information, but a scientific attitude, the ability to see straight, to evaluate bits of truth, and piece them together into a related whole. "The greatest indictment that can be brought against present civilization, in its intellectual phase, is that so little attention is given to instilling trust in intelligence and eager interest in its active manifestation.

"I take little interest in demonstrations of the average low level of native intelligence as long as I am aware how little is done to secure full operation of what native intellectual capacity there is, however limited it may be."

FRONTIERS OF SCIENCE

The Advancing Front of Science, Whittlesey House, 1937, by

George W. Gray, is a mine of pregnant quotations. It is an interesting report on his visits to the laboratories of foremost workers. Three pages are given of names of those to whom he is indebted. He notes, "The American public spends more money to attend two major football games than goes into a year's cancer research in all the institutions now at work on this truly major human problem."

He has covered a broad frontier from Pasadena to Moscow, and his reports are surprisingly up to date. Much of his news is of 1936 and 1937. The range of the news he brings us is from galaxies five hundred million light years away, through the atmosphere, radio, the new science of sound, to the intimate details of the interior of the atom. We continue to cull from the great.

OUR HIGHEST HOPE

"Isaiah Bowman said, 'In our time the highest hope of social advancement is based on a reasoned relationship of man to man, not a haphazard relationship. We have come to believe that the affairs of man are not subject to a malign fatalism as he goes forward in his "dark striving toward the good". Science is in relentless pursuit of power to diminish the darkness of that striving and to "shape reality from hope's vast dream". . .'

"'If the devices of social invention are able to keep pace with the scientific organization of nature, our new road may lead to a fairyland of achievement,' says Charles E. Merriman, political scientist, of the University of Chicago. 'The burdens of hunger, disease, toil, and fear may be lifted. The book of leisure may be opened, and the treasures of human appreciation and enjoyment made available to the mass of mankind.' . . .

"And from Russia echoes the confidence of Pavlov, 'Only science, exact science about human nature itself, and the most sincere approach to it by the aid of the omnipotent scientific method, will deliver man from his present gloom, and will purge him from his contemporary shame in the sphere of inter-human relations'."

A UNIVERSITY SURVEYS ITSELF

At Chicago the faculty in natural sciences makes a periodic survey of themselves. They put the members of the department on exhibit. They make them confess their articles of faith. And it is a grand show. In The World and Man as Science Sees Them, Doubleday, Doran, 1937, the departments file by with Forest Ray Moulton, editor, as drum major, a parade such as all love to watch. Prizes go to astronomy, geology, and all the biological sciences. About ten years ago, these same departments were paraded in "The Nature of the World and Man". Few universities would dare put their departments on inspection every few years in this way. In some cases it would result in obscene exposure.

It is an inspiring book. We have already referred to Professor Allee's treatment of man and insects and their social systems. Professor Moulton of the department of astronomy tells us the Milky Way is what we see edgewise and from an insignificant position on the sidelines of our galaxy. Magellan in the southern sky discovered the Magellanic Clouds which now we know to be the nearest galaxy to us, less than 100,000 light years away. Beyond in all directions, void, until at 700,000 light years there is a small galaxy, Taurus. And at 900,000, the great nebula of Andromeda, which we see edge on, by light which has been on its way since before man appeared on the earth.

Within a million light years there are only six galaxies. Now we go on our way 10,000,000 light years, and in that concentric sphere we find one thousand galaxies. But if we go on 500,000,000 light years we discover 100,000,000 galaxies like the Milky Way and Andromeda. And they are all moving outward, away from us, with a speed up to 15,000 miles per second, which increases with their distance.

For the more distant galaxies, Professor Moulton has to refer us to Professor Shapley of Harvard, who tells us of one super galaxy 7,000,000 light years in diameter, and suggests that there may be something bigger and better and beyond the super galaxies. And this he evidently found, for April 23, 1938, at Philadelphia, before the American Philosophical Society, he told of a more recent photographic survey of an area near the south galactic pole.

SCIENCE FUNDAMENTAL

George Sarton, of Harvard, who has devoted his life to the subject, in his The History of Science and the New Humanism, Harvard University Press, 1937, says, "I do not know who is the poorer, the old humanist without understanding of science or the scientist without appreciation of beauty . . . I would never claim that science is more important than art, morality, or religion, but it is more fundamental, for progress in any direction is always subordinated to some form or other of scientific progress".

In his Elihu Root Lectures of the Carnegie Institute of Washington, 1936, he said,

■ "The history of science is the story of a protracted struggle, which will never end, against the inertia of superstition and ignorance, against the liars and hypocrites, against the deceivers and the self-deceived, against all the forces of darkness and nonsense.

The history of society or government is the story of a protracted struggle, which will never end. Against all the forms of tyranny, whether individual or social, against arbitrariness in human dealings, and against the exploitation of the weak and the poor by the strong and the rich, the history of mankind is that of a Pilgrim's Progress, which can never be free from struggles, for the latter never end except with life itself."

EDUCATION BASED ON DEVELOPMENT

"Education, based upon a knowledge of the principles of development and aimed at the cultivation of better relations among all classes, races and nations is the chief hope of social progress. The most enduring effect of education is habit formation", said Edwin Grant Conklin, philosophical biologist, in his address as retiring president of the American Association for the Advancement of Science, at Indianapolis, December 27, 1937 (Science, December 31, 1937). He further stated:

"In all normal human beings it is possible to cultivate habits of unselfishness rather than selfishness, of sympathy rather than enmity, of cooperation rather than antagonism. To trust entirely to heredity to improve men or society is . . . to disregard the universal experience of mankind that human nature may be improved by humane nurture. . .

"The president of the University of Chicago has recently called science a failure in the educational process and has urged a return to philosophy as the only sure road to sound discipline and true culture. . . As an educational discipline there are no other studies that distinguish so sharply truth from error, evidence from opinion, reason from emotion."

"Education, then, which looks to the highest development of the physical, intellectual and moral capacities of men is the chief hope of human progress. . . Great progress can be made toward the 'good society' by the better development of the capacities we already possess. All the advances from savagery to the highest civilization have been made without any corresponding improvement in heredity. . .

THE ETHICS OF SCIENCE

"The ethics of science . . . teaches that both human nature and humane nurture may be improved . . . and the progress of the human race through future ages be promoted by intelligence and good will. . . It is concerned especially with education of a kind that establishes habits of rational thinking, generous feeling and courageous doing. . .

"The greatest problems that confront the human race are how to promote social cooperation; how to increase loyalty to truth, how to promote justice, and a spirit of brotherhood; how to expand ethics until it embraces all mankind. . .

"The faith, ideals and ethics of science constitute a form of natural religion . . . include . . . recognition of the fact that knowledge is relative, not absolute, and that only gradually do we arrive at truth concerning nature . . . "The ills of society, like the diseases of the body, have natural causes and they can be cured only by controlling those causes. . .

"That so little has been accomplished and so much remains to be done is due in part to refractory material, poor methods and the necessity of repeating this work in every generation. . . . Religious bodies are enormous organizations with great potentialities for good. Why should not science and religion be allies rather than enemies in this process of domesticating and civilizing the wild beast in man?"

FREEDOM THROUGH SCIENCE

"Freedom has been essential for the advance of science, and the time has come when scientists and scientific organizations should stand for freedom. . . Throughout the period of recorded human history there has been a notable growth of freedom not only from the rigors of nature but also from the tyrannies of men. . . Even in certain sciences, freedom of teaching and research has been restricted or prohibited, in spite of the fact that the advancement of science rests upon freedom to seek and test and proclaim the truth. . .

"Science should be the supreme guardian of intellectual freedom, but in this world crisis only a few scientists have fought for intellectual freedom. . . when it has been threatened. Perhaps they have lacked that confidence in absolute truth and that emotional exaltation that have led martyrs and heroes to welcome persecution. . .

"To us the inestimable privilege is given to add to the store of knowledge, to seek truth not only for truth's sake but also for humanity's sake, and to have a part in the greatest work of all time, namely, the further progress of the human race through the advancement of both science and ethics."

TEACHING LIFE-SCIENCE

Oscar Riddle, before the American Science Teachers Association, Atlantic City, December 31, 1936, Science Education, April, 1937, speaking "For Natural Science" on "The Relative Claims of Natural Science and of Social Studies to a Core Place in the Secondary School Curriculum", said:

"With our better universities and research institutes largely dedicated to truth, but with practically all of our other institutions neglecting, twisting, curbing or suppressing basic biologic truth, there is little wonder that our people are uninformed or misinformed on man's own nature and man's place in nature. . .

"Life-science can emphasize the newness of intimate knowledge of ourselves. Nearly all of the definite and worth-while that we know about our own bodies has been learned within the time of men now alive. Most that we know about the care of our bodies and nearly everything that we know about fighting disease successfully has been learned in that same time or in an even shorter period."

CHEMICAL BEGINNINGS

The Origin of Life, by A. I. Oparin, of the Biochemical Institute, U. S. S. R., Macmillan, 1938, has just been translated, though written two years ago. Fifteen years ago a preliminary draft of it was published in Russia. The subject is one of organic chemistry, biochemistry. Reviewing and rejecting all earlier theories as to the origin, the approach is wholly through chemistry. All life centers about carbon. In the molten earth carbon first united with the heavy metals, forming carbides. Acted on by superheated steam in the atmosphere, these would form hydrocarbons, and as the temperature cooled would take up water to form more complex ones. This reaction is the basis for the synthetic manufacture of fatty acids.

All living substance consists of colloidal aggregates. Colloids are dispersions of one substance in another. The first colloids in the sea were not living. They had no shape, boundary, or individuality. But around some colloidal particles water molecules arranged themselves to form a definite boundary, and such are called coazervates. Such coazervate droplets, "separated from the surrounding medium by a more or less definite border, . . . acquired a certain degree of individuality."

Now we get into rather complex chemical technique which leads to the subject of enzymes and "their enormous biological significance". "Without enzymes there can be no life", but enzymes are not living. There is obscurity here in the next step to photosynthesis and fermentation. The problem is not solved, but here is a clear exposition of how far chemists have gone and of the missing steps, fully documented and offering hope of a complete solution.

IMPROVED TECHNIQUES

We look out upon the world, and interpret what comes to us through the senses, through our beliefs, ideologies, sets of ideas that we have absorbed from parents and teachers, as the twig was being bent. While any set of such ideas, explanations invented in the past prevail, while we are under the influence of a system of mythology, folklore, theology, or philosophy, while we believe in a set of 'eternal verities', there is no freedom for us, there is little possibility of discovery. But periodically in spite of repressions and suppressions, great minds blaze forth like comets and bring new light to the world.

PROVING ETERNAL VERITIES FALSE

In the Harvard Alumni Bulletin, April 22, 1938, Brooks Atkinson, writing to the suggested 'toast', "The Value of a Liberal Education Judged from the Standpoint of Later Life", specified, "To provide a technique for enlightenment . . . to liberate a student from the taboos and habits of the routine world . . . to loosen his mind so that he can cope with the pitiless stream of ideas that will always pour down on him . . . those are some of the things a liberal education can do". And then he admits that Harvard didn't do it for him.

Galileo, in overturning the Aristotelian system in the seventeenth century, gave us a new technique with which to explore the universe. Those two Poles, Lobatchewsky and Lucasiewicz, within a century successfully challenging Euclid's axioms, made possible a new freedom for mathematical investigation. Einstein in this twentieth century with his theory of relativity gave us a new technique with which to scrutinize what we formerly held as true.

Now come the semanticists scrutinizing the words we use and showing how our language, differing from our organic nerve and brain reactions, throws the human machine out of kilter. Not only does this result in our entanglement in philosophic and metaphysical mazes, but economists and the critics of society have bogged down in words that are mere symbols, without consciousness that they were strangling themselves.

WORD JUGGLING

The new science of semantics makes obsolete most of the teaching of the philosophers, the metaphysicians, the economists. The decisions of the judges and the sacred themes of the statesmen, under semantic scrutiny resolve themselves into traps for mankind. But semantics is destructive only in that it clears the way for a re-examination and a better understanding of human difficulties.

The psychiatrist who sees most tragically the breakdown of humanity under the ideals and teachings of our present teachers, because of philosophies and principles and ethics, is naturally the first to appreciate the value of this new science and to apply it in repairing broken mentalities, in driving out devils and saving souls.

It will be long before our universities give general recognition. No major college yet offers a course in this important subject. But then the universities usually lag a few centuries behind the leaders of thought. Up to 1900 Harvard had not recognized in its courses that the world was round. To the universities semantics will long remain a heresy, for it would reveal to unprejudiced undergraduates that a large proportion of their professors were engaged in meaningless juggling of words and symbols, in philosophy, economics, and government.

STUART CHASE DISCOVERS SEMANTICS

Periodically Stuart Chase finds a new enthusiasm and brings it to a larger audience than it would otherwise reach. He has put the consumer on his guard. He has brought home to a larger public the waste of our American social system, of our soil, and of our continent's resources. Now he has discovered the waste of our human energy in our symbolic use of words.

The Tyranny of Words, Harcourt, Brace, 1938, by Stuart Chase, is the first attempt to popularize the work of the pioneers in semantics, and because of earlier publication of several chapters in Harper's immediately became a best seller. But even under his skillful handling the subjects he treats are tough and knotty. Moreover, understanding of them changes one's ideas materially, destroys his faith in words that have always been printed with a capital, leads one on to where his former beliefs look foolish.

But he has ruthlessly applied the same critical method to his own previous writings, selections from which he included with "Horrible Examples" of other writers in an appendix, with a semantic commentary showing how meaningless are the sacred words used by statesmen and economists examined in the light of the new semantics. Stuart Chase has done a brave job and he has reported in an interesting way on his study of the exponents of this discipline. He tells us he has "read Freud, Trotter, Le Bon, MacDougall, Watson".

MEANING AND SYMBOLS

He reports on the pioneers C. K. Ogden and I. A. Richards. He read their "Meaning of Meaning", and found Malinowski's essay, (reviewed in this Handbook, 20th ed., pp. 113, 114) the first attempt to deal with the study of the "influence of language on thought". Chase remarks, "The title sounded like more philosophy. On the contrary, philosophers were harried from pillar to post." He read P. W. Bridgman and "found a similar criticism of language". He read E. T. Bell and Lancelot Hogben, Henshaw Ward, and went back to Jeremy Bentham, the grandfather of the study of "imposter-terms" (cf. 20th ed., p. 39).

He "read Thurman Arnold's 'The Symbols of Government' and looked at language from another unsettling but illuminating angle. For the individual, as I can testify, a brief grounding in semantics, besides making philosophy unreadable, makes unreadable most political speeches, classical economic theory, after-dinner oratory, diplomatic notes, newspaper editorials, treatises on pedagogics and education, expert financial comment, dissertations on money and credit, accounts of debates, and Great Thoughts from Great Thinkers in general. You would be surprised at the amount of time this saves."

But he found his great inspiration, naturally, in Korzybski. He tells us, "In his book 'Science and Sanity', published in 1933, he explored the possibility of formulating a genuine science of communication. . . I looked for the first time into the awful depths of language itself; depths into which the grammarian and the lexicographer have seldom peered, for theirs is a different business. Grammar, syntax, dictionary derivations are to semantics as a history of the coinage is to the operations going on in a large modern bank. . .

"One wonders if modern methods of mass education promote as much knowledge in children's minds as they do confusion. . . Fortunately there is nothing seriously the matter with our natural mental equipment. It might be improved, but the normal human brain, to quote Korzybski, has the possibility of making at least ten (10) with 2,783,000 zeros after it, different connections between nerve cells. . .

"People are not 'dumb' because they lack mental equipment; they are dumb because they lack an adequate method for the use of that equipment. Those intellectuals whose pastime is to sit on high fences and deplore the innate stupidity of the herd are on a very shaky fence. . .

"In brief, with a dreadful irony, we are acting to produce precisely the kinds of things and situations which we do not want. . . I assume that it is a temporary perversion, that it is bound up to some extent with an unconscious misuse of man's most human attributes, thinking and its tool, language. . .

"Most of us are aware of the chronic inability of school children to understand what is taught them; their examination papers are familiar exhibits in communication failure."

THE NEW HERESY

As a popularizer it is Chase's job to attract our attention to this important field of knowledge and the unrecognized books the great thinkers have written. But he has opened himself to criticism and abuse from the philosophers, politicians, economists and others whom he tells in effect they are using terms in meaningless ways and don't know what they are talking about.

"One might continue almost indefinitely listing words about which there is much solemn argument, mostly meaningless and futile: Centralization, Decentralization, Production, Money, Credit, Economic Planning, Balance the Budget, and so forth. . . Pick up any magazine or newspaper, and you will find many of the articles devoted to sound and fury from politicians, editors, leaders of industry, and diplomats."

This is rather more than one who has committed himself in speech or print in support of the eternal verities, Democracy, Geometry, Economics, or what you will, can stand. So they resent it. Most of his reviewers criticize his presentation of Semantics from a hasty reading, and it isn't possible to read even Chase's report hastily and understand it. But they have failed to go back to his sources and understand their importance.

COUNT ALFRED KORZYBSKI

One of the great intellects of this century, to stand with Pavlov and Einstein, he is yet to be recognized, to come into his own. Primarily mathematical in his approach, in his work he draws upon every field of knowledge. In biology, neurology, psychiatry, mathematics, physics, specialists have checked his work and found his contributions sound. No one yet has felt competent to fully comprehend or criticize his broad studies and findings, to attempt a review and critique of his work as a whole. It will be long before the great centers of learning are able to utilize and interpret to the world the work he has accomplished.

Count Alfred Korzybski at the age of six was taught by his father to use calculus. For generations the men of this aristocratic Polish family had been engineers and mathematicians. A mathematical engineer of the University of Warsaw, Korzybski spent years studying Greek philosophy at the University of Rome. Trained cavalryman, fencer, marksman, he served in the war on the Russian General Staff till disabled and sent to Canada to test artillery for the Russian government.

His first book appeared in 1921. The following years were spent in intensive study in psychopathic hospitals. In 1933 appeared "Science and Sanity: An Introduction to Non-Aristotelian Systems and General Semantics". In the past several years seminars in General Semantics have been held at universities and colleges and psychopathic hospitals throughout the country. He is now establishing the Institute for General Semantics in Chicago.

Korzybski's work has been hailed and acclaimed by the great minds of the world and by the great specialists in mathematics, anthropology, biology, neurology, philosophy, and psychiatry, among them Malinowski, E. T. Bell, Bertrand Russell, William A. White, Smith Ely Jelliffe.

H. S. Jennings says, "The attempt of Count Korzybski to formulate the world and its processes, keeping in view the fact that no two things are identical . . . is something that had to be done, and it has within it the seeds of a much needed intellectual revolution"; Raymond Pearl: "A contribution to human thought and understanding of the very first rank of importance"; David G. Fairchild: "Korzybski's masterly treatise will act as a powerful force . . . Korzybski's criticisms are so profound that they change the very foundations upon which we have been used to depend"; William Morton Wheeler: "Count Korzybski's work seems to me to be of great value . . . to the biologist and sociologist in particular . . . lays the foundation for a sound and much-needed social, commercial and political ethics"; C. Judson Herrick: "Count Korzybski has diagnosed a fundamental source of confusion in thinking and in conduct"; P. W. Bridgman: "A technique by which the vicious consequences of verbal habits may be avoided"; Roy J. Kennedy: "Whether or not the reader's sanity is improved by a careful study of the book, he cannot fail to enlarge his capacity for clear thinking"; Ralph S. Lillie: "Korzybski's criticism of the present structure and usages of human society . . . is timely and well-founded".

EDUCATION AND SANITY

Korzybski has demonstrated the applicability of General Semantics to education in a number of educational institutions. At the Barstow School, Kansas City, the English work was re-organized by Director M. M. Kendig on a semantic basis. Semantics was introduced, too, by the late Cora L. Williams, Williams Institute, Berkeley, California, who wrote, "What Einstein has done for the outer realm of our being, Korzybski is doing for our inner realm".

Professor E. A. Hooton of Harvard writes me personally of the value of Korzybski's work in education as follows:

"I am deeply impressed with the practical possibilities of the application of Count Alfred Korzybski's semantic teachings to problems of education. This writer has an extraordinary grasp of the basic sciences of biology, chemistry, and mathematics. To this he adds a profound knowledge of the science of the meaning of language and mathematical logic. I am of the opinion that a great many psychoses and frustrations that fall to the lot of individuals in our civilized populations are due to the unsuitability of our linguistic structure to man's animal organism. While I do not think that a revision of language and a re-adaptation of its structure to the organism will solve every human problem, I nevertheless am convinced that the introduction of such a revision into our educational system would greatly ameliorate human misunderstandings and would straighten out countless individual difficulties.

"I therefore feel that all persons seriously interested in education should inform themselves in regard to Count Korzybski's work and I observe with great satisfaction the efforts of the few progressive teachers who have attempted to utilize these very promising and indubitably scientific methods of re-education."

A NEW HUMANISM

General Semantics, Olivet College, 1937, mimeographed, $1.00, is a report on a seminar given by Count Alfred Korzybski which makes abundantly clear the method by which this discipline may profitably be applied in educational institutions. It reveals the vitality, aliveness, practicability and profundity of Korzbyski and his method.

"Education in the Modern World" is an address by Joseph Brewer, President of Olivet College, published by the college, 1937, which reviews the educational application of Korzbyski's work in various educational institutions. He says,

"General Semantics presents a natural order of evaluation which can once more provide us with a direction, an Ariadne's thread for our 1937 maze. It might well take its place as the inheritor of the great Humanist Tradition, taking all knowledge including science to be its province and from which nothing that is human is considered alien. . .

"Man's language function is of paramount importance for his happiness since it affects directly the functioning of his nervous system and hence his adjustment to the world outside his skin, including other human beings.

"Unless his verbal and symbolical structures which can actually alter the constitution of the colloids in his nervous system, are similar to the structure of the world in which he lives, he is like a man trying to find his way in unknown territory by means of a map of some other country."

THE WORLD HAS JUST BEGUN

Our world is a new world. Our solar system is juvenile. No one is complaining about the age of our galactic system as compared with other nebulae. Life is recent. Only since the temperature of water and air, since the 'fitness of the environment' was just right, has life appeared. The world has just begun.

ON THE UP

Man, the species, is on the up. From a slow start some millions of years ago he has recently been getting up speed. In the last hundred thousand he has straightened up and become fairly presentable, though Hooton still apologizes for him to the apes. In the last ten thousand years he has developed a fellow feeling, come to speak of the species as 'mankind'. And mankind is on the march. His mastery of fire filled him with the desire to conquer all materials and forces, and he is on the way.

"It is all ahead of us. At every period in time there is somebody to say, 'I don't see what there is new to be done'. Go out and look. If we can cast off the bugaboo of 'Your world is finished', and put in its place, 'The world is begun', we have a marvelous future ahead of us." Speaking is C. F. Kettering, General Motors millionaire, inventor of the self-starter, the fever machine, and scores of devices (Readers Digest, January, 1938).

"We ought to quit being afraid of the future. Change is the law of life. We should work with change instead of being forced into it. All our education teaches finality. Business clamors for stability. Our thinking is conventionalized. . .

WHY IS THE GRASS GREEN?

"The most important research problem in the world today is 'to find out why grass is green'. . . If we knew that secret we could build engines to transform enough radiation from the sun into heat or chemical energy or electricity to run our machinery."

Man is a saprophyte, dependent for his food on other animals and plants, and they in turn on chlorophyl, the green coloring matter of all plants, which can utilize the sun's energy to manufacture organic compounds. The chemists are working on the process, will soon be able to do the trick. Conant, one of the foremost, sacrificed a possible victory to head Harvard. We are dependent in a large measure on life long since past, that stored up energy in earth's strata.

At Miami, where Kettering has been working on a machine to measure the sun's intensity, three months later he said to a reporter (Boston Herald, April 24, 1938):

"All our fuels are products of the sun. We dig coal and pump up petroleum and then use the energy given them by the sun.

"What we must do now is learn how to use today's sunshine rather than the sunshine of thousands of years ago. But we're so ignorant!"

WE ARE SO IGNORANT

"We don't know very much about anything. We're so terribly ignorant. If we would only admit it instead of hiding our ignorance behind high sounding scientific terms, we'd go further. . . All we can do is keep on the road and hope we'll come out somewhere. . . We hate to admit we don't know it all, and we keep ourselves back by pretending to have knowledge we don't possess."

Kettering deplors the world's dearth of creative minds. Like Socrates, he appreciates the density of ignorance in high places. More than two centuries ago William Penn in "Some Fruits of Solitude" wrote of "Education" and "Ignorance":

"It is admirable to consider how many millions of people come into and go out of the world ignorant of themselves and of the world they have lived in. . .

EDUCATION A NATURAL THING

"We are in pain to make them scholars, but not men; to talk rather than to know, which is true canting. The first thing obvious to children is what is sensible; and that we make no part of their rudiments.

"We press their memory too soon, and puzzle, strain and load them with words and rules; to know grammar and rhetoric, and a strange tongue or two, that it is ten to one may never be useful to them; leaving their natural genius to mechanical and physical, or natural knowledge uncultivated and neglected; which would be of exceeding use and pleasure to them through the whole course of their life . . .

"Children had rather be making of tools and instruments of play; shaping, drawing, framing, and building, etc., than getting some rules of propriety or speech by heart: and those also would follow with more judgment, and less trouble and time.

"It were happy if we studied nature more in natural things, whose rules are few, plain and most reasonable. Let us begin where she begins, go her pace, and close always where she ends, and we cannot miss of being good naturalists."

Thomas Whitney Surette, founder of the Concord School of Music where he has inspired and trained teachers so that they have revived music in a thousand schools, returning from Black Mountain College, where he has been professor of music and poetry, told the Women's City Club of New York, Christian Science Monitor, April 25, 1938):

"Education has once more become a simple natural thing. It has the force of a kind of religion . . . Here is a college that is like a family . . . no lectures . . . no degrees . . . no trustees. Conferences where there is the closest contact between teacher and pupil . . . discussion free . . . an intangible mixture of learning and living together."

WE NEED TO KNOW OUR WORLD

"The world is certainly a great and stately volume of natural things; and may not be improperly styled the hieroglyphics of a better. But, alas! how very few leaves of it do we really turn over! This ought to be the subject of the education of our youth, who at twenty, when they should be fit for business, know little or nothing of it." (William Penn).

"The world is so full of a number of things" that we have no need for other worlds to bring us enduring satisfactions,—to be "as happy as kings". We need information that will help us to an understanding of the world we live in and the opportunities before us. We need broad knowledge and understanding, the kind that will gradually send its roots down into the crannies and suck nourishment from deep below. We can make good use of the right kind of information and we suffer from lack of it.

We learn only through our senses and by experience, by trial and error, except as we learn imitatively from the experience of others. But that knowledge must stand the test not only of experience but of verification, so that it may become common to all men. That is scientific knowledge.

WE NEED TO KNOW OURSELVES

Most we need to know about ourselves. Man is still the great mystery. From the archeologist, the anthropologist, and the paleontologist, there is an enormous amount of fascinating information which is not available or known to the average school boy or even college graduate. It is questionable if half the faculty of Harvard University, the world's greatest center of light and learning, could pass the most elementary examination on the known history of man during the last million years, excluding of course that short period since we invented writing, a few thousand years ago.

"Unless the secondary school has led the youth to an understanding of himself and of his place in nature it has withheld or pilfered from him his modern birthright" (Oscar Riddle).

IMPROVING HUMAN BEHAVIOR

"It is human nature to change itself", William E. Hocking tells us. And John Dewey writes, "If human nature is unchangeable, then there is no such thing as education and all our efforts to educate are doomed to failure. For the very meaning of education is modification of native human nature in formation of those new ways of thinking, of feeling, of desiring, and of believing that are foreign to raw human nature."

When we speak of human nature, we mean the way we behave habitually, but our thought is fuzzy, we don't analyze (cf. 21st ed., p. 116 ff.). So changeable is behavior that we wouldn't enjoy the table manners of some of our relatives and ancestors not very remote. Human behavior constantly changes, subject to sun, temperature, winds, meteorological and physical conditions, with which we meet. The behavior of the plains Indians entirely changed after the horses of the Spanish, run wild, were captured and ridden by them.

Advertising 'pays' because it changes behavior habits to the profit of the advertiser. The means of controlling and changing human nature are constantly being extended by print, telephone, radio, loud speakers. The future belongs to the best radio voice. The psychologist is showing us how to use these forms of propaganda to more effectively change human behavior. The psychiatrist is improving his techniques to repair the damage the preceding have done. The endocrinologist is discovering short cuts by which the human nature of the individual may be radically changed. And the chemist is synthesizing the necessary hormones in his laboratory.

With purpose, planning, good will, and our present techniques, we need no more brains than we have at present to improve human behavior, to change human nature.

HALF FREE, HALF SLAVE

But the human mind is still in chains. Links of superstition have been broken, but still what we call our beliefs control our actions. These we absorbed unconsciously in childhood, beliefs that were shaped generations ago when less was known about our world.

The twigs have been bent, the trees are distorted. The world is run and operated by those that have been warped, given slants, ways of looking at things. They have been trained in folklore, folkways, the mythology of their parents and their teachers. As Professor Milliken says, "Mankind's fundamental beliefs about the universe and his place in it must in the end motivate all his activities and all his conduct".

Principles, philosophies, fundamentals, eternal verities, still control as did once magic and superstition. Unable to live up to false standards set, we are filled with a sense of failure and fear. We dare not face reality.

FACING REALITY

At the 100th anniversary of the birth of Colonel Francis Parker, one of his old pupils, Marion Foster Wotherspoon, mother of Carleton Washburne, called him "a realist, and a passionate foe both of sham and of all idealism which did not connect up with practical life".

While most of the speakers praising Colonel Parker failed to face reality as he had, some spoke up in his own style.

Harold Rugg, of Teachers College, Columbia, at the fifth general session, devoted to problems that teachers must face, said, "Face the problems! Confront them squarely, bravely, intelligently—not dodging an issue or a problem, a trend or a factor! . . . No honest and informed educator can longer keep these out of the program of his school—to keep them out is to keep life out of it! . . . Teachers must become students of the world scene! Of its trends and factors. But below these trends are two great problems. The whole world-struggle of today is over these: First, Who shall control and own property? Second, Who shall control government? For . . . 10,000 years—the struggle . . . has been over these . . . Today we tend to confuse them by saying, Fascism vs. Communism." (Progressive Education, December, 1937, pp. 614-617).

REJUVENATING THE ELITE

"Will the Upper Classes Vanish?" Struthers Burt asks in The Forum, December, 1937. Of course they will, they always have. They must constantly be replenished from below.

Henry R. Luce, of Time, "orated recently of conditions in this country: 'Without the aristocratic principle no society can endure . . . What slowly deadened our aristocratic sense was the expanding frontier, but more the expanding machine . . . But the aristocratic principle persisted in the United States in our fetish of comparative success . . . We got a plutocracy without any common sense of dignity and obligation. Money became more and more the only mark of success, but still we insisted that the rich man was no better than the poor man—and the rich man accepted the verdict. And so let me make it plain, the triumph of the mass mind is nowhere more apparent than in the frustration of the upper classes.'" (Wolcott Gibbs, "Bed of Neuroses").

'SAVING THE WORLD'

This idea that education may 'save the world' is a new thing for humanity. For a few thousand years or less man has largely been interested in his own salvation. Now he has a larger concept of something that may be worth while. He may 'save the world',—by which he means the world he knows, lives in, is comfortable in,—which means, from an anthropological point of view, his culture, what an historian might call his civilization, the ways he has been in the habit of looking at things and reacting toward them.

If we do not 'save the world', new and strange ways and customs will come in, perhaps be forced upon the survivors. That's what we mean. We don't mean we could avert the comet that may hit us and burn us up. We know we can't do that.

'Saving the world' may be, for aught we know, starting with Chinese culture of some thousands of years ago and carrying on, fertilized by Western science. And it may be, for aught we know, carried on by a race that is two-thirds African negroid, the Northern peoples having been swept away. The more we know the less confidence we have that our own ancestral line is the only one that should persist forever. But that is a new attitude.

IT'S A GREAT TIME TO LIVE

Now that there is movement and change and things are not static, it's a great time to live. Most of us would be uncomfortable if we were thrust back into our idealized Gothic eleventh century. Not many of us would feel happy powdered and be-wigged at the court of Louis XIV. We would have an uncomfortable time if our great grandparents turned up for a visit. If the world of our forefathers had been 'saved' and we were now planted down in it, what a stew we would be in.

There is something better, perhaps, than to 'save our world'. It is to play a small part in creating a better world, if you can conceive it, just a step at a time, without any blue prints, but with some vision and much faith. It's a great time for 'rugged individualism' of the right sort. It's a great time to live.

STATISTICALLY AND CRITICALLY PRESENTED

EXPLANATORY NOTE

In bold face type the basic statistical facts are given for each school as reported by the school. Enrollment figures are supposed to represent actual enrollment, but optimistic school heads occasionally list capacity figures. Many fail to report and others send figures asking that they be not published. Still others give a blanket approval of the statistics published in former editions. Such figures are printed in lieu of more up to date data.

Listed alphabetically under the town or city are the School, for Boys, for Girls or Coeducational (Coed); the Ages of the pupils enrolled; the date of establishment (Est); the head, with degrees, colleges, and title. The enrollment (Enr) is whenever possible divided into boarding (Bdg), Country Day (Co Day), and Day. The number of the faculty (Fac) in general includes only full-time instructors. Tuition (Tui) with its various ranges, boarding and day; the grades covered and the courses given, college preparatory (Col Prep), academic (Acad), and special (Music, Art, Domestic Science, etc.), are indicated. The type of ownership,—incorporated not for profit, partnership, proprietary; the number of trustees and how elected; the endowment; scholarships and their value; prizes and their value; denominational influence or affiliation; the colleges and associations by which the school is accredited, the number of pupils taking College Entrance Board Examinations (C E B Exams) for various years; the number of graduates entering college in 1937; and the number of living alumni, are given where reported. Accrediting by state departments of education and by church boards, and membership in non-accrediting associations, have been omitted.

BETHEL, ME. Alt 643 ft. Pop 2025 (1930). Motor Route 26 from Portland.

On a terrace above the Androscoggin, between Lewiston and Portland, this is a pleasant town of broad elm-shaded streets. Through the late Dr. John G. Gehring, nerve specialist, Bethel became widely known. Stretching along the main street are the imposing red brick and limestone buildings of the academy.

This old school entered upon a new era in 1936, its centennial year, when Mr. Sayles came from the principalship of the Adams, Massachusetts, High School, to succeed Frank E. Hanscom, long principal. Under his direction courses have been broadened and more boys and girls enrolled from outside the state, though northern New England students are still in the majority. College preparatory and general courses are offered. The modern buildings and much of the up to date equipment were given to the school by William Bingham. See page 1040.

Wassookeag has made a definite place for itself among the schools of northern New England. Tutorial in its system, giving boys virtually individual instruction, it avoids the cramming of the regulation tutoring school. Mr. Hatch, a former member of the faculties of Bowdoin and Cornell, has tremendous energy and devotes himself zealously to the school and his boys. A summer session, Wassookeag School-Camp, antedating the winter school by a year, is affiliated. See page 930.

Dating back almost a hundred and fifty years, Fryeburg Academy has always been coeducational and still attracts about an equal number of boys and girls. Paul Langdon, the Bernard Langdon of Oliver Wendell Holmes' novel "Elsie Venner" was the first principal. His most eminent successor was Daniel Webster, who here made his first and only attempt at teaching school. Since 1922 this academy has been under Mr. LaCasce. New buildings were provided in 1930 through the endowment of Cyrus H. K. Curtis.

This philanthropic institution was established by George W. Hinckley, now president of the Good Will Home Association, then a poor preacher who took three homeless boys into his family as a nucleus of the two thousand or more boys and girls who have since been given a home and education under his direction. Mr. Hinckley was one of the pioneers in the summer camp movement, having conducted a camp for boys in 1880 on Gardiner's Island, Rhode Island. Needy boys and girls are here given industrial training and schooling. Boys and girls grammar schools are separate, but both attend the same high school. The boys live fifteen in a cottage.

This Baptist academy has been in continuous operation for more than a century and a quarter. Made a fitting school for Colby College in 1877, it was reorganized for boys only in 1922 when Mr. Hunt, former public school principal, took charge. On the roll of its earlier alumni are many names of more than local fame. Maine still continues to furnish most of the students, but other parts of New England, the south and west are represented. Most of the graduates enter college.

PORTLAND, ME. Alt 26 ft. Pop 69,272 (1920) 70,810 (1930).

Still wearing an air of mellow dignity which modern innovations and summer tourists have not wholly obliterated, Portland is the gateway to, and the metropolis of Maine. Its eighteenth century homes and modern buildings, and its well kept shade trees enhance the city's natural loveliness. Extending along a saddleback about three miles long at the southwestern end of Casco Bay, it is the leading industrial city of the state and the home of many specialized manufactories. The City Hall with its municipal auditorium contains a notable pipe organ. A few doors west of Monument Square is the elm-shaded Wadsworth-Longfellow house, carefully preserved by the Maine Historical Society.

The Waynflete School is in the West End residential section. On the same street, nearer the center of the city, is the School of the Portland Society of Art. Westbrook Junior College, in the Deering section to the west, is the oldest educational institution of Universalist origin in the country.

Long known as the Waynflete Latin School and serving as a conservative college preparatory school for the daughters of Portland's leading families, this was completely reorganized in 1927. Under Miss Woodruff, assistant head mistress from 1929 and in full charge since 1931, the school has become something of a community enterprise with college preparation supplemented by broader, more colorful courses.

A well organized, endowed school for girls, Oak Grove today draws its patrons from many states and from foreign countries. Established by five influential and scholarly Friends who desired a "select school" for their children, it is still a Friends school though patronized by all denominations. Coeducational for seventy-five years, it was reorganized for girls in 1925. The present status of the school is chiefly due to the untiring zeal of the Owens and the devotion of the students to them, in response to their real and vital interest in each girl. Mr. Owen, who represents the section in the state senate, acts as business manager. The organization, curriculum, and student activities are in the competent hands of Mrs. Owen. Their twentieth year at Oak Grove is marked by the completion of another well equipped building. See page 997.

Maintained through changes and vicissitudes for over a century, this old academy has been revived in the last dozen years under Mr. Hyde. It was chartered by the General Court when the territory was part of Massachusetts "for the purpose of promoting piety and virtue; and for the education of youth in such languages, and such of the liberal arts and sciences as the Trustees shall direct." In 1928 Cyrus H. K. Curtis gave over a quarter of a million dollars for new buildings and equipment. Vigorous, far-sighted, Mr. Hyde maintains this as a low priced school fitted to the needs of the boys and girls of the neighboring coast and islands, though some of the students come from farther afield. The low rate is made possible by a cooperative plan through which the girls of the home economics department, under supervision, cook and serve the meals. An increasing number of graduates now go on to college. See page 1040.

The establishment of St. Paul's marked a new trend in education in America. It was the first of the church schools to make a somewhat snobbish appeal to the new class that was rapidly acquiring wealth from the development of water power, textile mills and the exploitation of the continent.

Their need was first recognized by Dr. George Cheyne Shattuck, who in 1855 gave his estate near Concord for the purpose, as he expressed it, in characteristic Victorian language in his deed of gift, "(Of endowing a school of the highest class for boys, in which they may obtain an education which shall fit them either for college or business, including thorough intellectual training in the various branches of learning, gymnastics and manly exercises adapted to preserve health and strengthen the physical condition, such æsthetic culture and accomplishments as shall tend to refine the manners and elevate the taste, together with careful moral and religious instruction."

The Rev. Henry Augustus Coit, then only twenty-five, was chosen by the trustees as the first rector. Of a family long prominent in American education, his early training had been under the Rev. William Augustus Muhlenberg, at whose suggestion he was later an instructor in the College of St. James, Hagerstown, Md. Dr. Muhlenberg's school at College Point, L. I., which later became St. Paul's College, in its eighteen years existence exerted a great influence on the future private schools in America, for among his pupils in addition to Coit were several future bishops who were later influential in organizing the earliest Episcopal church schools. In his unreserved adoption of the "in loco parentis" attitude Dr. Coit showed the influence of his master, Muhlenberg.

From the English public schools which he had visited, much was adapted. Inspiration was without doubt especially derived from Arnold at Rugby. Even in outdoor life English influence was at first apparent. Dr. Coit encouraged cricket rather than baseball. The English schoolroom nomenclature, too, was here introduced to the American boy. St. Paul's still has "forms," but the "removes," "evensong" and "matins" of Dr. Coit's time are now forgotten. Most of the boys in the four upper forms have separate rooms. The young boys have "alcoves" in the dormitories similar to the "cubicles" of many of the English public schools. This custom here first introduced in the American private schools has been followed by Groton, St. Mark's and other schools.

Dr. Coit was so awe-inspiring a man that only in recent years have his old pupils been able to write of him realistically. Owen Wister describes him as "a stern, sad man in clerical black, born seven hundred years later than the days of his spiritual kin." Arthur Stanwood Pier, now a member of the faculty, in his history of the school reviewed in a recent edition of this Handbook, speaks of him "in character and zeal and temperament very like the man of wrath, John Brown . . . a ruthless fanatic." To John Brown whose aims and "actions he abhorred . . . his soul was akin."

For nearly forty years Dr. Coit was the head and heart of St. Paul's and made it one of the foremost socially desirable schools. Following his death, his brother Joseph Howland Coit, who had been vice rector since 1865, carried on and later the Rev. Henry Ferguson, a St. Paul's "old boy." But his successors were not able to fill his shoes.

Though St. Paul's boys no longer play the English game they are made much aware of what is "cricket." "Quite uncritical in his outlook," Mr. Pier says, the St. Paul boy goes out into the world with "an eagerness to join in some common effort for the good of all—if only some one will direct him where that common effort is being made! Again a qualification that indicates there may be something lacking in a school spirit that is solely one of cheerful cooperation." The largest of the church boarding schools, St. Paul's enrolls over four hundred boys, some receiving partial remission of tuition or full scholarships. On the long waiting list about a fifth are sons of alumni.

The recent history of the school is the story of Samuel Smith Drury, rector from 1911 to his death in 1938, priest, preacher, writer, a man of compulsive type, of great driving force. To his boys he was sternly aloof, to his aides an inspiration and saintly man. To the public he was a willing and able speaker, a prolific and popular writer whose annual school reports made the front pages and must have had a broadening effect on the alumni.

Mr. Kittredge, one of the two vice rectors, son of the famous Harvard Shakespearean "Kitty," and author of several books on Cape Cod, was immediately appointed acting head. A man of warmth and human understanding, he may bring to the trustees realization that restriction of the head mastership to an ordained priest is today an anachronism.

Settled in 1638, Exeter for more than a century and a half has been famous for its academy. With wide, elm-shaded streets and an air of undisturbed tranquillity, it resembles perhaps more than any other New England town an English provincial village. The buildings of Phillips Exeter Academy are set on a spacious campus on either side of Front Street. The main Academy building, designed by Cram and Ferguson in 1915, is a reproduction in brick and marble of the smaller building erected in 1794. The Plimpton Playing Fields extend from Court Street to the river, across which are the Plimpton Fields beyond. Bordering on Front Street is the sixteen acre campus of Robinson Seminary and on High Street, Emerson School for Boys adjoins the Exeter playing fields near the stadium.

The immediate success of Phillips Academy at Andover led John Phillips to establish in 1781 in his home town in New Hampshire this new academy, which was opened two years later. So the Phillips put the wealth that had come to them from the patriotic work of making powder for Washington's Revolutionary army into education, where it has fired many a youth since.

Benjamin Abbot, the second principal, ruled over the institution with great power and wisdom for fifty years. He had been trained at Andover under Principal Pearson, graduated from Harvard in 1788, and came immediately to Exeter where he became perhaps the most famous of all the early academy teachers. Daniel Webster came to him for schooling in 1796. In 1838 Gideon L. Soule, who had already been a teacher in the school for seventeen years, succeeded Dr. Abbot, and in 1872 the fiftieth year of his continuous service in the academy was celebrated.

The long line of principals, men of strong personality, may have prompted President Eliot of Harvard to characterize Exeter as "one of the most precious institutions of the country." Not the least of these was Harlan P. Amen, who, coming to the principalship after "a period of executive laxness," in his eighteen years of office by strong and sympathetic leadership brought Exeter again to her ancient standards.

There were giants in those days on the faculty, too, and none more famous than "Bull" Wentworth, the terror of whose name extended beyond the school room through his innumerable mathematics textbooks. It was these men who gave Exeter the reputation of being faculty controlled while Andover was under more autocratic dominance. No theological seminary as at Andover here held to strict orthodoxy, so there was freedom to question. For generations graduates resorted chiefly to the less godly and more liberal Harvard.

Masterful head masters and masters put Exeter at the top and influenced teaching at other schools. They impressed a pattern that has long remained hard to change, and there lingers at Exeter a tradition of rugged democracy. With reverence the ancient maxims are still repeated in the attractive illustrated brochure written by Myron Williams of the faculty: "from the past comes the ancient Exeter tradition of thoroughness, accuracy and severity," "Exeter is still a hard school," "the process of learning is in the main irksome," "the pupil should bear the laboring oar."

Knowing the school today, in the hands of liberal gentlemen, a little overawed perhaps by the more virile men who preceded, one must interpret this as an attempt to live up to past rigors and methods. But there is a beginning of self questioning, even of the teaching of Wentworth's Euclid. George T. Major, instructor in mathematics since 1927, has the temerity to ask in a recent issue of the Bulletin, "What good is it?" Inevitable change will come slowly.

Dr. Perry, brother of the more famous Bliss, son of a Williams College professor, came to the principalship in 1914. One of the world's best mixers, beloved by all who know him—and he knows everyone—he is much in demand as an after dinner speaker.

The Harkness millions in 1930 brought the Harkness Plan with many new brick structures and thirty instructors, who meet small groups of ten to fifteen students about oval tables. The groups are so graded that some may proceed more rapidly than others.

Founded before the establishment of local high schools and named for two benefactors, this academy has functioned for more than a century as a boarding and community day school. For the first twenty years only boys were enrolled. In 1855 it became the first institution of higher learning in the state of Vermont to admit young women. The original building of limestone, quarried from the side of Equinox Mountain, is still in use.

"To make school life a more real, less sheltered, less self-centered venture; to educate the individual in the light of what he can later do toward solving the problems of society," was Mrs. Hinton's vision in opening this coeducational preparatory school. And she has gone far toward realizing her ideal. Her school resembles the Landerziehungsheime of Germany rather than the typical progressive schools of this country. Evening discussions, concerts, lectures, married instructors who build their own homes on property adjoining—give a characteristic flavor not found elsewhere. Vigorous, dynamic, broad-visioned, Mrs. Hinton is the mother of three children. The first incorporated school for girls in New England established "to regulate the tempers, to improve the taste, to discipline and enlarge minds, and to form the morals of the youth who may be members of it," the academy was named in honor of Madam Sarah Abbot whose funds made possible the first building. For more than a century it maintained the even tenor of its traditions, undiverted by passing fashions. Daughters, granddaughters, and great-granddaughters of loyal alumnæ from every state in the Union turn to Abbot for their schooling. Under Bertha Bailey, principal from 1912 to 1935, the school, as from its early days, offered advanced as well as preparatory courses. Today there is no advanced work but courses in music and art have been strengthened to be acceptable for college entrance. Miss Hearsey, former professor of English at Hollins College, was elected in 1936 and immediately did away with many outworn customs. Winning the support of the alumnæ, she has inaugurated a drive for funds for new buildings and equipment. See page 1001.

Named in honor of Phillips Brooks, one time resident of North Andover, the buildings and site were donated by the Russell family. Mr. Ashburn, a Groton boy and later a master, with teaching experience elsewhere, has shown in his plan and conduct of the school that he has outgrown the Groton mode and has cast his school in a larger mold. He endeavors to develop in his boys some capacity for intellectual enjoyment.

Of the great national schools which have become such distinctive features in American education, Andover, the oldest, was founded by Samuel Phillips, who, together with his father and his uncle John, deeded both land and money for the establishment of a school to be opened at Andover, where the grandfather of Samuel Phillips had been head master of the Grammar School. The donors proposed "to lay the foundation of a SCHOOL OR ACADEMY for the purpose of instructing Youth, not only in English and Latin, Grammar, Writing, Arithmetic and those Sciences wherein they are commonly taught; but more especially to learn them the great end and real business of living." Further "it is again declared that the first and principal object of this Institution is the promotion of true piety and virtue."

The school opened in the midst of the Revolution and in 1780 was incorporated with the title of Phillips Academy, the first chartered academy in New England. Among its early patrons were Washingtons and Lees from Virginia, as well as Lowells and Quincys from Massachusetts. The first head master, Eliphalet Pearson, had been a classmate of the founder at Dummer and at Harvard. A man of force and commanding presence, he was known to his awed students as "Elephant" Pearson. Later he was professor of Hebrew at Harvard and the Andover Theological Seminary.

There were twenty-three boys in the academy when, in 1810, Dr. John Adams came to the master's throne. By 1817 the number had increased to a hundred, and during his twenty-three years Dr. Adams admitted 1119 pupils, nearly a fifth of whom became ministers.

Under Samuel H. Taylor, a man of picturesque and striking personality, head master from 1837 to 1871, the institution gradually took on its present character. After his death, however, it declined in prestige until it was rejuvenated and brought in touch with modern methods of education by Dr. Cecil F. P. Bancroft, principal from 1874 to 1901.

The first head master to give his whole time to administration was Alfred E. Stearns, in office for thirty years from 1903, alumnus of the Theological Seminary and of Amherst, under whose administration the old primitive austere atmosphere of Andover gave way to a richer life as millions, largely secured by Thomas Cochran, '90, a Morgan partner, were spent in enlarging and beautifying the plant, which today makes an ensemble fittingly designated 'the loveliest group of buildings in America.' To the casual visitor Andover today looks like a college. There is no study hall. The boys wander from their dormitory rooms across the campus to their recitations. The archaeological museum, with its research workers, its art museums with special exhibits, add to the college flavor.

Andover perhaps more than Exeter long remained conservative, less influenced by the Unitarian movements which have stirred New England, and perhaps for that reason Andover early became primarily a preparatory school for more conservative Yale rather than Harvard, which soon came under more liberal influences.

Of the more than twenty thousand boys that have graduated from the school about sixty per cent have gone to Yale and perhaps twenty per cent to Harvard. Its ten thousand loyal living alumni are organized in numerous associations throughout the country and their continued interest through the years has brought increased endowments and gifts.

In 1933 Mr. Fuess became head master. A graduate of Amherst, he had been instructor of English at Andover since 1908, secretary of the alumni fund, editor of the alumni magazine, and secretary for information. Official historian of Andover, he had published notable biographies. From the first he has boldly established new policies, strengthened the bonds with the alumni through frequent visits and numerous addresses all over the country and displayed versatility, tact, and skill. The teaching staff has been much enlarged and the class room divisions reduced in size as a step toward one of Mr. Fuess' high purposes,—to teach the boy "how to adjust himself to his environment and to remold it to his heart's desire." See page 929.

The only school for young boys in New England making use of military training, this was founded by the father of the present head who holds to the good old New England traditions of cleanliness and good food. The boys are given a happy, wholesome, country life. Horses owned by the school are used extensively by the boys both during the school year and in the summer at Camp Skylark which Mr. Mitchell conducts. See page 946.

BOSTON, MASS. Pop 748,060 (1920) 781,188 (1930).

A city of individuality, charm and flavor, the world offers few more distinctive places of residence. It brings to mind the old English town for which it was named, and of all the great American cities it is in many ways nearest to England. Bostonians, whatever their origin, Puritan, Irish, Italian or Jew, show the love they bear their city through their slightly veiled contemptuous superiority toward New York and other more vulgar places. Though its climate is harsh, its people aloof and its government corrupt, those who hail from within fifty miles proudly proclaim themselves Bostonians.

The wealthier families live within a periphery of twenty miles where the tax rate is lower—in horsey or sea-going communities on the North or South Shores. The maligned and misunderstood Boston aristocracy, so-called, are actually of recent and humble stock. Boston's old families date from the Revolution. Few of their names will be found today in the social register or even the telephone book. The forebears of the present aristocracy were small town and country people, smugglers and privateersmen from Newburyport and Marblehead who poured in to seize the confiscated property of the Tories who sailed away with Lord Howe. The Lowells and Lawrences, who owe their fame and gave their name to the mill cities, with Cardinal O'Connell, who as a child worked long hours in their ancestral mills, annually oppose restriction of child labor. Such Boston families are easy butts for the satirical novelists. Their trusteed estates, acting through financial institutions in conjunction with the Catholic hierarchy, insure, through politicians, continuance of their interests.

Boston proper is Roman Catholic. Dominant in politics, formerly split into bitter warring factions under the old leaders, a younger generation of more promise, more American, not so slavishly Bostonese in accent as the past leaders, is coming to the fore. The Puritan hierarchy and morality has become Catholic and the cloak of Mather has long been flauntingly worn by Cardinal O'Connell.

The golden dome on Beacon Hill, the hub-cap of the universe, long looked down on the greatest educational center and student population, and until the dawn of the twentieth century, on the literary center of the country. Today the higher institutions of learning in the city, Boston University (Methodist), Boston College (Catholic), Northeastern and Simmons Colleges; across the Charles, Massachusetts Institute of Technology, Harvard, and Radcliffe; on the outer fringes, Tufts and Wellesley; together with the professional and vocational schools enroll some 40,000 students.

The private schools, patronized by upper middle class families, are in Back Bay and the Fenway. As the wealthier Bostonians live mostly outside the city, Brookline, the Newtons, Milton, Dedham, Cambridge, Weston, Waltham, and Concord, all have their private schools, separately treated.

Mrs. Edina Campbell-Dover, Principal. Est 1879.

Enr: Day 100, Eve 90. Fac: 8. Tui: $25 mo. Courses 3-8 mos.

Mrs. Dover's colorful personality and keen interest in the individual make her school outstanding. More flexible than the usual secretarial school, it was established by William Hickox and operated continuously by him until 1920, when Mrs. Dover was made principal. Since 1920 she has been sole owner. One of the first schools to introduce the Gregg system, Hickox continued pioneering by introducing in 1925 a course in speed-writing. The shorter courses attract a considerable number of college graduates.

Member N E Assoc Col and Secondary Sch.

Developed along modern but conservative lines, Huntington emphasizes preparation for all colleges and universities. Special courses prepare for M.I.T., for business administration colleges, and for College Board examinations. The school is housed in the Boston Y.M.C.A. building which, with a playing field in Brookline, gives it an athletic equipment unusual for a city school. Its success has been due to its filling a real need. A summer session admitting girls as well as boys is conducted during July and August and covers an entire year's work in all grammar and high school subjects. Mr. Sampson, connected with the school since 1912, and head since 1925, is devoted to the interests of his boys. The Huntington Chapter of the Cum Laude Society was established in 1928. See page 938.

Two years of college or its equivalent are required for admission to this school, the only institution in New England whose primary object is the training of nursery school teachers. Recently the curriculum has been broadened to include some courses dealing with the needs of children of kindergarten age. The school is affiliated with Boston University School of Education where some of the courses are taken, and practice work is done in the affiliated demonstration nursery school on Ruggles Street and in various other nursery schools in and near Boston. Miss Eliot is discriminating in her choice of students, annually rejecting many applicants.

This oldest endowed secondary school in the United States was established some nine years after the founding of Harvard College to prepare boys for that institution and has continued its work without interruption. John Eliot, "Apostle to the Indians," when minister of the First Church of Roxbury, signed a statement with others of the town that they, "in consideration of their religious care of posterity, have taken into consideration how necessary the education of their children in literature will be, to fit them for public service, both in Church and Commonwealth, in succeeding ages. They, therefore, unanimously have consented and agreed to erect a free school in the said Town of Roxbury." In 1671 Thomas Bell, formerly a freeman of Roxbury, died in London, willing two hundred acres of Roxbury lands to the school and naming the Rev. John Eliot and two other officers of the First Church as trustees of the endowment.

"The Free Schoole in Roxburie," as it was called, was not then free in the sense of being supported by uniform taxation or free from all tuition fees. But today the school is free to twenty boys in each entering class who live within the limits of the original town of Roxbury.

William C. Collar, for more than half a century connected with the school, in his long career attained a national position in the educational world. Appointed a master in 1857 and head master in 1867, he resigned in 1907 and died in 1916. D. O. S. Lowell, a graduate of Bowdoin, became a master in the school in 1884 and was head master from 1909 to his retirement in June, 1921. Daniel V. Thompson, who came from Lawrenceville as his successor, maintained the high scholastic standards. It was in his regime that the school moved to its present site. Following his death in 1932 the trustees selected as his successor Mr. Northrop, once head of Brearley, and more recently of the Chicago Latin School for Boys.

Exclusively of college grade since 1934, with courses in liberal arts parallel to those of the first two years of a four year college, Bradford is the oldest institution in New England for the higher education of women. It was established by the parishioners of the Congregational Church of the town of Bradford and until 1836 was coeducational. The school has been fortunate throughout its history in having on its board of trustees men and women of unusual capacity and devotion to the interests of Bradford. Alice Freeman Palmer long took active interest. The unusual advantages of Bradford early drew students from all over New England, but for many decades the patronage has been national. During the century and more of its existence over nine thousand students have attended the school. The strong personality of Laura A. Knott, principal from 1901 to 1918, was long stamped on the life and work of the school. With Marion Coats, principal from 1918 to 1927, the great impetus toward the graduate courses began, culminating under Dr. Denworth in 1930 in the acceptance of Bradford as a junior college member of the New England Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools. Dr. Denworth was formerly principal of Friends High School, Moorestown, N. J., and head mistress of Stevens School, Germantown, Pa. Especially trained, she brought to her task zeal, ambition and marked personality. While under her able scholastic and financial administration standards of scholarship have been raised and the faculty strengthened, a very human attitude prevails. See page 1052.

This successful college preparatory school has since 1919 been under the direction of Mr. Southworth, long a teacher in the Boston Latin School and formerly head of Camp Marienfeld. He has greatly enriched the course of study, especially in the sciences, music, and art, and has successfully developed a boarding department and country day program. Endowed by General Sylvanus Thayer, the "father of West Point," the school attained prominence under Dr. William Gallagher, principal for twenty-three years. Today it draws its students from a great number of neighboring cities and towns. Thayerlands, the sub-preparatory department, has since 1924 occupied an adjoining estate.

It was established as a school of personality by the Rev. Thomas Bickford, a Congregational minister of Cambridge. The choicest residence section adjacent to the City of Boston by which it is almost surrounded, Brookline has in the past ten years been invaded by the Jews. Four synagogues and the increase of apartment houses indicate recent changes in population attributable to the once low tax rate. Its shaded roads winding about its hills provide a setting for many beautiful homes. Here great estates, some of the oldest in the country, crown the southern heights. The slogan, 'a model town', is still heard, and a semblance of the old town government still exists, honest but stupid, with petty politicians nibbling to get in. The schools are largely in the residence districts near Coolidge Corner and Washington Square and in Chestnut Hill.

One of the most widely known and successful progressive schools, Beaver has come to be socially accepted by discriminating Boston families. Liberal minded parents, desirous of bringing to Boston more progressive educational methods than were then available, called Dr. Smith, who had successfully developed the Park School in Baltimore, to organize a similar school here. He has been extraordinarily successful and has added constantly to the activities and plant of the school. Since 1931 the upper classes have been limited to girls. Among the many features unusual in secondary schools are the courses in instrumental and vocal music for which school credit is given, opportunities for instruction in the decorative arts and sciences, the kitchens in which girls are given experience under home conditions, a completely equipped theatre and beautiful art and library quarters. A department for training apprentice teachers, many of them recent college graduates, has been in operation since the early days of the school. A small boarding department was opened in 1936. Outstanding among progressive elementary schools, Shady Hill had its beginnings in a group of children largely from families of the Harvard faculty. It bears the name of the estate of Charles Eliot Norton. Reorganized in 1927 under a governing board of parents and faculty, it has been under the skillful administration of Miss Taylor since 1921. The present open site near the Charles river has been occupied since 1926.

CONCORD, MASS. Alt 121 ft. Pop 6461 (1920) 7477 (1930).

The home of Hawthorne, Emerson, Thoreau, and the Alcotts, Concord is a literary shrine with the significance in America of England's Stratford or Germany's Weimar. A mecca of the patriotic, here was fired the "shot heard round the world." And here Thoreau in jail wrote his "Civil Disobedience" which through Tolstoi and Gandhi has shaken the foundations of the world's two greatest empires.

But its schools of today are in no way revolutionary. Concord Academy occupies the former Samuel Hoar estate and the adjacent property on Main Street. The Fenn School is on Monument Street, about a half mile from the bridge. The Concord Summer School of Music, under Thomas Whitney Surette, is held in Concord Academy. Three miles from the center of the town are the brick Colonial buildings and spacious grounds of Middlesex.

Citizens of Concord and adjacent towns, seeking for their daughters a type of school not available in the vicinity, brought about the merging of several old local institutions to found this academy. This school was established as a Harvard preparatory school by Frederick Winsor and a group of notable and wealthy Harvard men. Mr. Winsor, who graduated from Harvard in 1893, served as master at Taft and Exeter, and for three years head master of the Gilman Country School, Baltimore. Eclectically he combined the English house system, first introduced at Lawrenceville, with some of the features of the church schools of England. From the first, satisfactory college entrance standards have been maintained, but the interests are much broader, as is evidenced by the courses in music, fine arts and woodworking. Each member of the graduating class has carved a panel for the assembly hall. The boys have been encouraged to build the collections in the school museum and the school zoo. From the faculty in the last two decades have come nine heads of prominent schools. Mr. Winsor has given his close interest to building the school, establishing a system of visiting national alumni centers to interest boys of promise from all parts of the country in the competitive prize scholarship plan which he was the first secondary school man to inaugurate, following the ideas of President Conant at Harvard. In 1938 he announced his retirement and the appointment of his successor Mr. Terry, former assistant head master of Noble and Greenough School.

One of the nation's great secondary schools, Deerfield is the creation of Mr. Boyden. Fresh from Amherst he came to head Dickinson Academy, the local high school housed in an ugly brick building. Today Mr. Boyden is one of the most influential men in secondary school education, playing an important part in the reorganization and planning of other schools. Former masters trained by him are following in his footsteps as head masters elsewhere. So great has been the confidence and friendliness felt for Mr. Boyden that in 1924 when the school through state statute lost the support of the town, heads of schools like Exeter, Taft and Andover cooperated in his appeal for funds for the present beautiful equipment. Mr. Boyden was the first to work out here a successful system of athletics for all. The social community life of the school and general participation in dramatics are made use of in training and developing the personality of each boy. Unusual, unconventional and natural are such features as the Sunday evening sings and a survey and published reports by students on the geology of the country round about. The Amherst-Williams-Dartmouth tradition is strong, though a fifth of the graduates enter the 'big three' each year by Board examinations. Mr. Boyden selects from his candidates the type he can develop with greatest success. Both he and Mrs. Boyden know each boy in the school and every boy passes through the science and mathematics classes that Mrs. Boyden teaches. See page 944.

In establishing and endowing an academy, equipping lecture rooms, and placing English and scientific courses on the same plane as the classical, Samuel Williston, wealthy manufacturer of the town, took a radical step. Under Josiah Clark, principal from 1849 to 1863, the standards of instruction in ancient classics were established. Under Marshall Henshaw (1863-76), Mr. Williston's ideal of a school in which science, mathematics and English should be held in equal honor and pursued with equal thoroughness as the ancient classics, was realized. Of the ten thousand who have attended the school during its long existence, more than a third have entered some thirty colleges and universities; a fifth, the learned professions. Seven of its teachers have become college presidents; seventeen, college professors; nine, principals of other schools. Dr. Joseph Sawyer, connected for half a century with Williston, resigned in 1919 because of failing health. Mr. Galbraith, for nearly twenty years master at Middlesex School, has been principal since 1919 and has succeeded in broadening the school's appeal, modernizing its outlook, and bringing its standards up to those of the best college preparatory schools.

WILLISTON JUNIOR SCHOOL, with its own head master, E. R. Clare, has been maintained as a separate unit since 1916. It offers work of the fourth through the eighth grades and has its own faculty of five. The majority of the boys enter the senior school. See page 939.

Miss Cressler and Miss Sumner have here created a school of unusual atmosphere. Before the war they had a school in Rome, later a small group, Elmhurst, for young girls in Connersville, Indiana, which they directed until 1926. The present name is derived in part from the Stoneleigh Manor Hotel at Rye Beach, N. H., which they occupied for four years, and in part from the old Prospect Hill School in Greenfield. The trustees of this latter institution, long discontinued except for local classes in music and art, turned over the large endowment fund that had accumulated and built the present beautiful plant. Here, reminiscent of the best of the liberal Victorians, the head mistresses give their girls intimate and friendly supervision and a sense of well being in a milieu of intellectual culture. See page 1005.

Founded by Dr. Peabody with a coterie of Boston aristocrats, the school still remains the lengthened shadow of his own uncompromising personality. Bishop Lawrence, still a trustee, is the only other survivor of the original group. Groton has brought nurture, intellectual pap, and a spirit of aristocratic democracy to leading and socially ambitious families, especially from New York. The Roosevelts native talent for publicity has rather spoiled the seclusion long sedulously sought.

"Groton has been a Church school, believing profoundly in the power of the Spirit and in the duty of service being passed from generation to generation by personal intimate contact . . .", writes Frank Davis Ashburn, alumnus and former master of Groton, now head of Brooks School, in "Fifty Years On", published 1934. "For at least twenty-five years the texts and courses gave no hint that there had been men before Adam, that Charles Darwin and Andrew D. White, to name only two, had confronted established religion with the most startling challenge since Martin Luther."

Mr. Ashburn frankly and graciously meets the critics who have dubbed Groton aristocratic, un-American, British, "absurdly pure", keeping its boys "unspotted from the world". "The code is strict, in some respects almost monastic. . . . The question of the possible psychological cramping of a boy by too much of it is more serious. . . . The single spot in which the cramping has been most felt has been the spiritual. Individuals feel that there has been too much dogmatism and not enough reason; too much chapel and not enough freedom of thought". So much attention is given to sacred studies that few of its graduates go into the ministry. "Groton turns out a type", chiefly a so-called "business type".

A modification of the monitorial system which for twenty years had been in successful use at St. Mark's was adopted at Groton and has from the first proved successful, but at Groton the boys are called prefects. A head prefect and six prefects are appointed annually from the upper form. They exercise a considerable measure of influence on the student body, which develops responsibility in the holders of these offices and lessens the load of the masters. The boys at Groton do not have separate rooms; all except the prefects live in cubicles. Denied their accustomed luxuries of living, they wash in cold water in tin basins. The system that is followed at St. Paul's and St. Mark's for the younger boys is here continued through all forms, and Groton's system in this respect has been copied in some other church schools. The two upper forms are provided with studies and the lower forms study at desks in large schoolrooms. The relations between master and pupil at Groton are particularly intimate in all branches of school activity. Boys are selected for admission in order from lists on which they are registered at birth. Eight scholarship boys are admitted annually on competitive examination without reference to previous environment.

Conservative in so many ways, Groton has been unusually progressive in others. Printing, woodworking, science in all its forms, music, drawing, have been introduced to provide enriched activities. The school Quarterly gives evidence of an eye to English models, of cultural inbreeding, of a superiority complex which is the result of lack of complete adjustment to environment. Groton has been a notable experiment in aristocratic conservatism, in its early years in the midst of a crude culture, and later in a changing world to which it remains unadjusted. Its friends are not unconcerned about its future.

Since 1898 it has enrolled boys only. The Dr. Samuel A. Founded to fit boys for Harvard and girls for the duties of the home, Derby Academy has been in continuous operation since 1791. Early in 1922 it was reorganized by interested citizens who engaged John R. P. French, now at Cambridge School, as head. A new site was purchased, and the academy developed for a time along modern, progressive lines. Mr. Cherry came to the school in 1930 from Avon Old Farms.

Tabor is an unusual school, the creation of Mr. Lillard. Here he has built a successful college preparatory school which through boat building, sailing, weekend cruises in the school yacht, Easter cruises to the West Indies, and summer cruises to Central America and Europe, offers unusual incentives to good work. The sea had always made a strong appeal to Mr. Lillard, a master at Andover until 1916, and in the local coeducational academy at Marion, he saw the possibilities of a boys school in which he could make use of the old New England seafaring traditions. Long active in the interchange of students between the schools of England, France, and Germany, he inaugurated the International Schoolboy Fellowship in 1927. In his work he is now assisted by a son as director of admissions. The summer term, open to students from other schools as well as Tabor boys, is directed by a son-in-law, Evan Collins. High academic standing and a fortunate situation near the estates of some of the older Boston families have made the academy in recent years one of the country's leading preparatory schools. Still, however, it draws the majority of its students from local families, although as a result of special effort to recruit from further afield about half the residents come from outside Massachusetts. Contacts of boarders with Milton homes and weekend privileges are encouraged. The Explorer's Club brings old and young together. Although the Harvard tradition is strong, the school definitely encourages boys who wish to enter other colleges.

As early as 1798 steps were taken to establish a local academy which finally opened in 1807 and was conducted interruptedly until 1866 when, on the establishment of a town high school, it was closed. The academy, reopened in 1885 on a new site, was coeducational until 1901. Under Harrison Otis Apthorp the school first won national prominence which receded under Principal Cobb. But since Mr. Field, a naturalist and entomologist of scientific training, took over the school in 1914, its progress has been upward.

The founder, Frederick J. Fessenden, who had been a master at The Hill School under the great Meigs, was one of the first to hold unswervingly to his purpose of maintaining a school wholly for young boys to fit them for the next four years of the great college preparatory schools. His became preeminent among schools of the type, a little austere and high ceilinged both in its architecture and ideals. The organization and equipment are most complete. Discipline is largely relegated to one master. Only the worst cases come to the attention of the head master. Invitations to the Saturday night assemblies for the boys interested in dancing are prized in Boston families. In 1935 the son of the founder, who had been assistant head master for some years, was made sole head. The father became president of the board. Another son, Frederick J. Jr., also a graduate of Williams, is business manager. See page 940.

Established to make thorough secondary schooling available for the poor boys of the time, the school in the early years required daily work on the farm or in the buildings. Today each boy works ten hours a week. The school has from the first afforded abundant opportunity for a boy to secure an education or preparation for college. The founder's rigorous ideals and ideas of life and training for the guidance of youth continued under Dr. Henry Franklin Cutler, principal from 1890 to 1932. He was succeeded by the late Elliott Speer, a man of liberal religious views, who had been president of The Northfield Schools since 1926. He inaugurated policies quite different from some held by the conservative fundamentalists then on the faculty. Mr. Porter, who had long been active in the larger work of the Y. M. C. One of the most expensive of the girls schools, the curriculum and intellectual atmosphere are a little Victorian, but a larger proportion of the girls take the college preparatory course than in the usual finishing school. The administrative genius, skill, and tact of Mira H. Hall won her school a national reputation. From the first she was successful in impressing her educational ideals on her girls. On her death in 1937 her will left to her niece controlling interest in the school and a large part of her estate. The new head mistress, through her long executive experience in the school and her winning personality, has the confidence of patrons and trustees.

This school is the creation of and centers around its present head master under whom, since its establishment, it has enjoyed a consistent and solid growth in numbers and reputation. From the first Mr. Buck's masterful and buoyant personality has dominated the school and found expression in vigorous and wholesome ideals. Mrs. Buck, though she takes no formal part, plays a vital role in the life of the school. The sincerity of the atmosphere and the efficiency of the simple organization command admiration. Boys come from all over the country; the youngest have single rooms, the upper class boys may have single or double rooms with a common study and are given considerable liberty and responsibility to bridge the gap from school to college. The school achieves much more than mere college preparation, though this is met in a scholarly and efficient way. See page 945.

This subpreparatory school founded by Harriet Burnett and Eliza Burnett Fay has remained in the Fay family even to the present third generation. Originally it prepared for St. Mark's but now sends its boys to other large preparatory schools as well. The life is simple, frugal. Standards of physical care and health are those of the wealthy families from which most of the boys come. A little of the English feeling that boys should be 'toughened' pervades. Punishment largely takes the form of long walks. See page 947.

Inspired by the success of St. Paul's and by the desire to have a similar school in his native town of Southborough, Joseph Burnett founded St. Mark's School. Assured of prestige from the first, it developed steadily in strength and efficiency under the capable management of William E. Peck, head master from 1882 until 1894. His successor, the Rev. Dr. William G. Thayer who remained in charge until 1930, zealously maintained the ideals of the school. The life remained intimate, proscribed; admission rigidly restricted; but in his later years Dr. Thayer became liberal and progressive.

St. Mark's is a church school of the parental type, with all its activities confined to one large building. The boys of the three lower forms do not have separate rooms but occupy dormitories with windowed alcoves. Though the general policy was modeled after that of St. Paul's, one notable innovation in American school boy life was introduced which has proved a valuable contribution and has been extensively adopted by private schools since established. From its opening St. Mark's has had its present system of monitors, six or seven boys chosen from the sixth form who "are the representatives of the school. have certain duties and a general oversight of the life of the boys. They are supposed to stand for the school ideals and to exert their influence and leadership."

Dr. Parkman, of the historical Boston family, is an old St. Mark's boy and an Overseer of Harvard where he spent five years after graduation in study and administrative work. He has brought a new alertness and straightforwardness which have won friends in every direction, enriched the life with new activities, and the curriculum with new elective courses in music, navigation, politics, poetry. The school now appeals to others than sons of alumni, and provides a few full scholarships each year for boys of unusual promise.

This oldest secondary boarding school in the country was established by William Dummer, Lieutenant Governor of Massachusetts, who in 1761 bequeathed his house and farm at Byfield for the purpose. Two years later the school opened under the celebrated Samuel Moody who made it a grammar school of the earlier type. Here were prepared for Harvard many boys who later became prominent in the life of the nation, including the founder of Andover. For years the school dwindled and finally became moribund. In 1930 with the coming of Mr. and Mrs. Eames, who had been at Deerfield with Mr. Boyden, the academy entered upon an era of new life and vigor. They brought youth, enthusiasm, and steadfastness of purpose to the building of a new school on the old. They have modernized name and equipment. Boys are encouraged through their own labors and effort to contribute to the material welfare of the school, and through their interest and earnestness funds have been raised, adding to the plant. Mr. Eames has made this one of the important secondary schools of the country. See page 942.

Modeled after and following the traditions of English schools of the order like Downside and Ampleforth, this was founded as the School of St. Gregory the Great. A daughter house of the Abbey of Fort Augustus of Scotland, the priory is under the English Congregation of the Order of St. Benedict. But both priory and school are almost wholly American in personnel. Here boys from discriminating Catholic families are trained for college and for life. Father Diman, prior of the community, was the founder and long head master of the neighboring St. George's. To his personal interest and administrative genius is largely due the growth and prosperity of the school. His keen and flexible mind, his sweet and calm serenity, make a strong appeal to all. Founded by the Rev. John B. Diman who later established Portsmouth Priory School, St. George's has long been under the control of Bishop James De Wolf Perry. During the administration of Stephen P. Cabot, a master in the school from 1901, and head master from 1917, St. George's went through a period of great material growth. The alumni took an increasing interest in the school, evidenced by St. George's Clubs at the three great universities to which the majority of the boys go. Mr. Cabot "ultimately resigned on religious grounds" in 1926. Those who know the school are impressed with the beauty of the setting, the matchlessness of the architecture, and the dominance of Bishop Perry. Mr. Merrick, for thirteen years a master at St. Paul's School, head master since 1928, has won the support of influential church people. Interested in athletics, he is popular with his boys.

The city of Roger Williams and the capital of the state, Providence, at the head of Narragansett Bay, was once an important seaport. Today it is an industrial city second in population in New England. Founded in 1636, few cities in the country have more landmarks of prime historic interest or such a collection of notable examples of Colonial architecture. The state house on Capitol Hill is a huge Renaissance structure of Georgia marble, designed by Boston architects, McKim, Mead, and White. The private schools center about the Art Museum and Brown University on College Hill.

For a quarter of a century a non-sectarian day school for girls, Lincoln has had a boarding department since 1912. Its growth in the last decade is due largely to the devoted efforts of Frances E. Wheeler, previously head of the girls department of Moses Brown School, who was made principal in 1925 when the school was taken over by the Society of Friends. Lincoln now appeals to conservative families of moderate means who value the sound academic training and characteristic simplicity of a Quaker institution. This school bears the name of its founder whose story as a leader in art and education is well told by her niece, Blanche E. Wheeler Williams, in her biography published in 1934. Eighth of her generation in Concord, endowed with an interest in art, in the eighties she opened a studio in Providence out of which gradually developed this school. It was what we would call today a progressive school, following principles advocated by Eliot of Harvard. School work was informal but intensive.

In the summer, groups of girls went with her to her villa in France. Here she trained as assistants Marion E. Park, now president of Bryn Mawr, and Katherine Lord, now head of Winsor School. "Any education that does not prepare a girl to live well in her own home is fundamentally defective," Miss Wheeler announced in an early school circular. Miss Dey, for some years associate principal, has been head mistress since Miss Wheeler's death in 1920. A woman of pervasive personality, progressive in her educational ideals, she continues to enroll girls from far afield. Columbine Hill just outside the city is for younger girls eight to fourteen. This school in its plan of education, layout of grounds, and architecture is the creation of the founder, Theodate Pope, now Mrs. John Wallace Riddle, who had earlier designed Westover School. To these plans she devoted more than ten years of her life and most of her wealth. Still carried out is the original idea, to make use of many of the educational features characteristic of old New England farm life,—the arts and crafts, the community interests,—for the purpose of developing initiative and responsibility. Since 1930 the provost has been Dr. Kammerer, former dean of Trinity Cathedral, Pittsburgh. Under him the school emphasizes individual approach, small classes and "assignment of boys to tutors", instead of central classroom study. Music, art, applied arts, shop work, forestry are provided for and encouraged, and on the estate there are opportunities for fishing and hunting. There are no interschool sports, all games are intramural. Participating as citizens in all the operations of community life in this small commonwealth, most of the boys are prepared for college. The present directors, formerly with the Dalton Schools and Columbia University, have here gone forward with the ideals on which Dr. Fred Goldfrank, a New York pediatrician, established this school. Open air classrooms, wholesome and natural activities, much outdoor life, a rich and varied curriculum preparatory to college, are outstanding characteristics. Dr. Christina, Swedish, scholarly, Dr. Boris, Russian, Lincoln-esque, alert minded, like their faculty are Gentiles. Dr. Boris' book, "The Ideal School", published in 1936, gives some understanding of the ends towards which they are working. Wide elm-shaded streets and fine old houses give Farmington an atmosphere of leisure and unostentatious prosperity. It is known to the outer world chiefly for its school. The founder, Sarah Porter, sister of President Porter of Yale, in the eighty-seven years of her life made this school pre-eminent as the "result of her own unusual character. She gave to hundreds of the best born women of the land that poise and stability of character, that combination of learning and good manners, which is a mark of the noblest American womanhood." From 1900 the school was continued by her nephew, Robert Porter Keep, and later by Mrs. Keep who had been a pupil of Miss Porter. Since 1917 Mrs. Keep's son, successful as an instructor at Andover, has carried on. A Victorian attitude of genteel superiority and culture still prevails. Every girl must take some of the conventional courses in languages, mathematics, history. The college preparatory course, discontinued some years ago because "the work was found to be encroaching too much on the courses that this school desires to emphasize", will again be offered in 1938. The "best born" alumnae still send their daughters to the same venerable houses along the same village street. And their daughters still show the same evidence of breeding, deserving of a better education.

Several of the city's private schools are widely known.

The vigorous and inspiring personality of Miss Langley, principal since 1922, vitalizes this progressive school. An outgrowth of the Lanier School, it was later under Marietta Johnson who used it as her northern branch. An interested and devoted board have made it possible for Miss Langley to incorporate in the curriculum various attractive features, among them a training school for teachers. The colorful life derives from the educational principles of Parker and Dewey and a busy hum of activity pervades. Boys and girls and an unusually attractive group of men and women, who constitute the faculty, work together unceasingly and happily toward common ends. The school catalog is produced in the printing shop, in charge of a veteran printer. An observatory was almost wholly constructed by the pupils, under guidance. The phrase, "the life of the school", is meaningful here. Everyone lives intensely, with the one end of accomplishment. See page 1044.

Miss Ruutz-Rees, of English birth and education, a naturalized citizen of this country in which she has lived since 1883, with degrees from Columbia as well as St. Andrew's, established this school in Wallingford on the Choate Farm, moving to Greenwich in 1900. Broad scholarship, a masculine grasp of mind, keen human interest in her girls, her graduates and alumnae, an unusual teacher who uses the classics to inspire her pupils—she has created a school unlike any other. Miss Lowndes, skilled horsewoman, literary scholar, was co-head mistress from 1910 until their retirement in 1938. A distinctive flavor is given the school by the number of married faculty and staff members, many with children of their own. Here is no narrow conventual atmosphere. The intellectual and physical life is robust and well supervised. A pupil must pass examinations qualifying her for the major colleges, Bryn Mawr, Vassar, Smith, Wellesley, to receive the school diploma. Rosemary has much suggestive of English girls schools in the customs, the fostered traditions, the classical terminology, the stress on walking or "bounding", the uniforms, the faculty teaching in academic gowns. Miss Ruutz-Rees or one of her assistants "takes Chapel" every evening in academic gown, and at the close of the service takes every girl by the hand for a friendly word or a cheery good night. Boys are encouraged to come to the school for Sunday calls and an occasional dance. In 1937 Mrs. Jessup with Mrs. Evers who formerly had her own school in Italy, were made acting heads. HARTFORD, CONN. Alt 38 ft. Pop 138,036 (1920) 164,072.

Model and inspirer of many cities that have improved upon it, the capital of the state is on the Connecticut river fifty miles from Long Island Sound. Civic pride early resulted in a system of well laid out parks and substantial public buildings. Here are the home offices of many of the large national insurance companies, so every fire alarm is heard in Hartford and every obituary brings tears to the eyes of its leading citizens. But the Connecticut river floods periodically wash away all tears and other things. The city wears an air of complacent repose, but the vigor of its life pulsates in new extensions to the north and west and blossoms periodically in a beautiful bridge or a notable building. When Mark Twain, Harriet Beecher Stowe, and Charles Dudley Warner lived here, Hartford well maintained literary pretensions. Trinity College, started patriotically as Washington College in 1823, became Episcopal under its present name in 1845. In West Hartford, a residential suburb, is the attractive plant of Kingswood School.

Simplicity, self reliance, and directness of purpose still characterize Kent, although it has become one of the world's great schools. When Father Sill started the first small group in the one farmhouse, the plan of self-help by which the boys do practically all the work was developed,—a system which has since been modified and copied by many other boys schools. The simple and severe Norman chapel is an architectural gem, but the religious life remains actual and sincere as in the early days when, sweaty in their soiled smocks from the fields, the school knelt before the improvised altar. For over thirty years Father Sill has devoted his whole life to his boys. In the midst of a million dollars worth of new architecture he still lives simply, serving tea each afternoon to the seniors in his attic study. He still coaches and coxswains his crews and every three years takes them to Henley, which brings renown. There is no time at Kent for boys to wander. There are duties and varied activities indoors and out. And the demand for places is such that only the studious and earnest boy who will respond to the religious atmosphere should seek admission. Money is non-essential, for Father Sill maintains a sliding scale of charges, assessing parents enough to meet the year's budget, in accordance with their ability to pay, from almost nothing to $1500. A summer session, a lusty offshoot at South Kent, an interested alumni, voluminous publicity, the adoration of his old boys, the admiration of all, are some of the rewards of this devoted life.

From the first Hotchkiss has been intimately associated with Yale. Edward G. Coy, the first head master, a graduate of Yale, had served at the old Phillips Academy in Andover and brought with him to the newly founded school much of the atmosphere of Andover. The trustees, too have usually been Yale men, and Frederick S. Jones, president today, was for years Dean of Yale College. The graduates have generally shown preference for Yale, though in recent years the number entering other colleges has greatly increased and now a large delegation is sent yearly to Princeton and many enter Harvard, Williams, and M. I. T., and a few Amherst, Cornell and midwestern universities.

Named for the widow of the inventor of the famous machine gun, who provided the plant and endowment, it was under Dr. Huber Gray Buehler, affectionately known as "The King", that the school developed its present sturdy character. Each year the King declared "there is only one rule in this school, Be a gentleman!" and the implications of this one rule cast a shade of responsibility over the previously unruffled brows of those lads from homes of wealth where pleasure dominated. Under Dr. Buehler's direction Hotchkiss became recognized as one of the foremost preparatory schools of the country. Mr. Van Santvoord, old Hotchkiss boy, Rhodes scholar, in 1926 was appointed head master after teaching at Winchester School, England, at Yale and at the University of Buffalo. Under him the plant has been improved; the Spartan simplicity and intensity of the life relaxed. Physical welfare and athletics for health and recreation, forestry and winter sports are stressed. The curriculum has been broadened and the finer things of life, art and music, are encouraged. Broadened too in the last few years has been the scope of the head master's activities. In addition to classroom teaching of seniors and lower middlers, he now acts as educational adviser and trustee of some of the surrounding schools.

Established by Mary R. Hillard, who was trained at Miss Porter's and long headed St. Margaret's, Westover was for years permeated with her sentimental spirit of religion, which made special appeal to the wealthy Episcopal families who sent their daughters to her. Something between a saint and a snob, she fostered a reputation for exclusiveness. Miss Dillingham, scholarly, Bryn Mawrish, head mistress since 1933, has done away with much of the formality and pomp, fostering a modern freedom wholly new to the school. Still they wear the Westover capes, and the girls are considered snobbish. The Dorcas Society still sews for Dr. Grenfell's Mission. Still the life is somewhat soft, the athletics casual. But Westover is no longer a mere finishing school. The faculty has been strengthened and today a larger proportion of the girls take college preparatory work.

Bearing its present name since 1936 when the Community School, directed by Mrs. Macintosh since 1934, purchased from Grace Church of New York the property long used by St. Luke's School, this is now a modern country day school. Mrs. Macintosh heads the primary and girls departments. Mr. Thomas came as head master in 1937 after seven years as instructor at Romford School.

New Haven is an industrial city famous for its locks and clocks. On the green stand three ancient and interesting types of the old New England Meeting House. To the south is a great display of Roman architecture, —bank, court house and federal building. North of the green Yale in the past ten years, fertilized by Standard Oil money, has spawned successive quadrangles of bastard Gothic, branded Sterling or Harkness. This hundred million dollar plant in 1937 was put in the care, as president, of Provost Seymour who is close to the financial pulse of the nation and apologist for big business in its international relations. But a Yale spirit of awareness lives in its Institute of Human Relations and in its law faculty that dares to reveal revered junk and sham. Hopkins Grammar School is on the old Ik Marvel estate northwest of the Boulevard. In Whitneyville, two miles northeast of the city, are the country day school, Hamden Hall, and Larson Junior College.

With the appointment of Dr. Lovell as rector in 1916 this ancient academy, established on the bequest of Edward Hopkins, five times governor of Connecticut Colony, entered upon a new era. Breaking with the two century academic routine, he revised, expanded, and enriched the classical curriculum, and when the school moved to its present site in 1925 inaugurated a full country day program. He has built up a faculty unusual in its breadth of experience. Five were born in foreign lands, others have studied and traveled abroad. For its first fifty years the school sent its graduates on to Harvard. After Yale came into existence it naturally prepared chiefly for that institution and more than fourteen hundred of its students have graduated from that college. From 1795 to 1921 every president of Yale was associated with Hopkins either as graduate, rector, or trustee. See page 949.

Planned as early as 1846 and incorporated in 1854, this academy differs in type both from the academy and the high school, between which it is historically a connecting link. The movement to establish a free academy met with great opposition, for many at this time opposed free education beyond the elementary schools. The orators of the day, including Daniel Webster, were enlisted, and the agitation which resulted did much to further the development of the high school system, but in Norwich no high school was established. Though amply endowed, the Free Academy makes a nominal charge to residents of the town and exacts a low fee from non-residents. The school was early influenced by the Putnam School of Newburyport, no longer existing. Mr. Tirrell has been principal since 1903.

There is a warmth and sincerity about this church school brought to it by Mr. Lefferts, head master since 1920, though something of the old sanctimonious atmosphere still lingers in the chinks and crevices. It was founded by one of the great school masters, William E. Peck, who left St. Mark's to come here to more fully carry out his ideals. He was succeeded by William Beach Olmsted who enlisted the interest of people of wealth and gave the school social standing. Mr. Lefferts, educated at Taft and Yale, came to Pomfret from the Thacher School in California. His appealing smile and something reminiscent of the great open spaces immediately won patrons and students. He has broadened and liberalized the school and encourages independent thinking among his boys. See page 958.

Miss Walker conducted her school for seven years in Lakewood, New Jersey, where she won the patronage of New York families of wealth and power. In 1917 she moved the school to Simsbury and remained in direct charge until her marriage in 1921 to Dr. Terry Smith. She has since controlled the school through her resident head, in 1938 appointing to succeed Jessie G. Hewitt, Mrs. Speer, widow of the former head master of Mount Hermon School, daughter of Dr. Henry Hunter Welles of the Presbyterian Board of National Missions in New York, and mother of three children. The school has for years maintained high standards of college preparatory work and offers advanced courses in languages, music and art. Much is made of outdoor life, but the pride of the school is its stable of half a hundred horses. The girls, as carefully cared for as are the horses, have their own characteristic customs and terminology. Under a student president and board of prefects an elaborate system of committee work and student government anticipates the politics of Junior League life. Replacing the houses destroyed by incendiary fires in 1933, a new luxuriously equipped brick building brings everything from gymnasium to classroom under one roof, except the dormitory for younger girls and the huge riding ring.

Established by Mrs. C. E. Richardson, an Englishwoman of wide educational experience, this was modeled after the best of the English private schools for girls. Louisa Low and her niece, Edith Heywood, took charge in 1883, and continued so far as practicable the policies and ideals of the founder. Under Miss Roper, long co-principal, and since Miss Heywood's death in 1927, head mistress, the school has continued to stand for thorough scholarship and all round development of its pupils. In Miss Tilley, a capable executive, the English tradition has been continued. Resident pupils come from all over the country. The day department here and in the New Canaan group has the patronage of the leading families. See page 1012.

Founded as the Connecticut Literary Institution over a century ago and known as Suffield School for many years, the designation "Academy" was given in 1937. The school functions as the town senior high school. Dr. Gage, who came to Suffield in 1924 after many years in charge of the College of Yale in China, has given the school its present characteristic closer contact between boys and faculty than is usual. Broad cultural courses, and opportunities for practical business training for the non-college boy are available, as well as adequate college preparation. See page 954.

One of the most prosperous and successful of the younger New England preparatory schools, since its establishment this has been dominated by the atmosphere and ideals of the best New England homes. The Choate School has come into its fuller life during the able administration of Dr. St. John, head master since 1908, whose enthusiasm, good judgment, ready sympathy, and discrimination have been ably supplemented by Mrs. St. John's personal interest in maintaining the friendly, intimate atmosphere that characterized the school in its earlier days. Although nearly all the courses of study are planned with college entrance in view, no rigid adherence to forms is insisted on and the student may take subjects chosen from different forms to suit his own needs. Interest in the individual boy and the purpose to give him what he as an individual needs is the ideal that Dr. St. John holds up to his unusual corps of masters. The flexible system of forms; separate divisions for honor students; special opportunities in art, music and literature; orthopedic and physical examinations with an individual corrective and athletic program for each boy; and a close personal relationship with the boy's family help to accomplish this ideal. An historic school, Gunnery was founded by the abolitionist, Frederick W. Gunn, and his wife, Abigail Brinsmade. John C. Brinsmade, a nephew, head master from 1881 to 1922, carried on. He was followed by Hamilton Gibson, son of the famous author and naturalist, long senior master at Berkshire School. Mr. Gibson rejuvenated the school physically while maintaining the old individualism and holding that "luxury, waste, and soft living are contrary to the spirit of the school." In 1936 he went into retirement, turning the school over to his brother-in-law, son of Princeton's Henry van Dyke, and for years pastor of Washington's Congregational Church. Mr. and Mrs. van Dyke bring to Gunnery earnest enthusiasm for their boys and the opportunities the school offers them. See page 961.

The village of Mattatuck, from which Waterbury grew, antedated the Revolution by nearly a century. In the deep narrow valley of the Naugatuck, the modern city is an important center of the brass industries. Wealthy manufacturers have long supported the private schools and have for many years brought musicians and lecturers to the city. In a region of homes to the northwest is McTernan School. Saint Margaret's, long in an older residential section near the center of the city, moved to a country site on the outskirts in the fall of 1928.

Saint Margaret's had its beginnings in the Collegiate Institute for Young Ladies, founded in 1865. It was incorporated as a church school ten years later, and from the first has attracted a discriminating clientele. The spirit of the school today is in large part due to Miss Edell, whose modest but pervasive personality is particularly attractive to the conservative patrons. Emphasis is laid on preparation for the leading colleges to which the school sends about half its graduates. But to the girls preparing for college as well as those taking the broad general course, much extra curricular work is available in drama, art, and especially music. See page 1010.

Forty-six years of his life were given by Horace Dutton Taft to the creation and maintenance of this school. He began life as a lawyer like his two brothers, one of whom became president and chief justice. But teaching drew him in 1887 first to Yale as a tutor in Latin, then, three years later, to his own school. He was a great head master, a tremendous worker, and inspired his boys to work, stamping his personality upon the school. Under him the only salvation was through hard work. But he won confidence by his geniality and large-heartedness, and comradeship in the classroom and on the playground. Having endowed the school with high ideals of work and scholarship, Mr. Taft gave it unconditionally to a self-perpetuating board of trustees and retired in 1936, though he remains chairman of the board. Mr. Cruikshank after teaching at Hopkins Grammar and at Gunnery Schools, had in the previous six years built his own neighboring Romford School which his brother now directs. Big in mind and body, reserved, he makes an equally strong appeal to alumni and his boys, inspiring confidence, and is likely to go far. He inherited a great school with a beautiful plant not wholly paid for. About half the boys are from Connecticut and New York, and many from the middle west. The course of study, not as broad as in some schools of similar type, is intensive and prepares thoroughly for all colleges, though nearby Yale casts its shadow. See page 957.

The school and the head master both celebrate their twenty-fifth anniversaries this year with the addition of a new social center and dormitory, completing the million dollar plant. In 1874 five of the Loomis family drew up a charter and incorporated this school on what had been since 1639 the Loomis homestead. The broad charter provided for practical training for the girls and vocational and agricultural training for the boys of the neighborhood, with preference to members of the Loomis family and residents of Windsor, but no restrictions on subjects taught. By 1912 two millions had accumulated and the school opened in 1914. Mr. Batchelder, called from Hotchkiss as head master, has developed the school following the pattern of the best New England preparatory schools. Since 1927 the girls have occupied two houses across the river, named Chaffee in honor of the mother of the founders. The student body represents a democratic cross section of society, with a generous proportion of sons of ministers, doctors, educators, and other professional men. About half the boys take the academic course. The other half are distributed between scientific and business courses. For boys who may be interested, agricultural training is available. Pupils share in the useful labor of the school, caring for their own rooms, the classrooms and the school grounds and athletic fields. The endowment makes possible a low rate of tuition and there are a number of scholarships. The student council plans and supervises student activities, affording a measure of self-government which cultivates a sense of responsibility. Mrs. Batchelder, who was Evelyn Longman, a sculptor of genius and renown, maintains her studio on the campus, not without beneficial influence on the boys. There is about the school evidence of an awareness of things of beauty and things doing in the world. See page 954.

ALBANY, N.Y. Alt 30 ft. Pop 113,344 (1920) 127,412 (1930).

The city is dominated by the massive state capitol building on Capitol Hill, beside which rises the pretentious State Education building. At the junction of the Hudson and Mohawk rivers, Albany was once a seat of the old time Dutch patroon aristocracy. Today it is an educational center with its New York State College for Teachers, Law School, Medical College, and College of Pharmacy directly in the city; while at Troy some six miles up the river are other important educational institutions. Of the three well known private schools in Albany, the Academy for Girls is still in the old downtown district. The million dollar building of the Academy for Boys in the New Scotland Avenue section has been occupied since 1931. On a high plateau north of the city, in Loudonville, St. Agnes is housed in a modern plant.

Dr. McCormick, a master since 1912, has fully maintained the standards impressed on the school by Henry P. Warren, who at his death in 1919 had been head master for over thirty years. This is a thriving country day school with a boarding department. The college preparatory work is efficient; the physical and non-academic activities vigorous and stimulating. Founded by Bishop William Croswell Doane of Albany under the shadow of the Cathedral, the school long attracted daughters of conservative families in the city. Three notable women devoted their lives to its upbuilding,—Ellen W. Boyd, Catherine R. Seabury, and Matilda Gray. Miss Pittman, energetic and pervasive, brought new vitality when she came to the school in 1930. Under her vigorous administration academic standards have been maintained and the tone modernized. Since 1935 Briarcliff has offered only junior college courses and for four years (1933-37) was a member of the American Association of Junior Colleges. It developed from Mrs. Dow's School, which, under Mrs. Edith Cooper Hartman from 1920 to 1926 was one of the best known finishing schools in the country, offering interesting courses in music, art, and the theatre arts. Miss Flick, president since 1929, was formerly recorder at Vassar. In addition to the regulation junior college courses there is opportunity for practical apprentice work and foreign study trips.

"Dobbs" has long been one of the schools most desired by New York families of social standing in certain restricted circles. Enrolling the majority of its girls through its alumnae, the school in recent years has opened its doors to girls from the middle stretches of the country. Eliza and Sarah Masters established their Female Seminary on the Post Road overlooking the river and conducted it for nearly half a century. Traces of their 19th century religious tone are still evident, but under Miss Pierce, a New Englander, who came from the Potomac School in Washington in 1920 a more liberal spirit prevails. And though the Bible still figures, interest in things political and economic, and in the arts, fine and domestic, is encouraged. There is greater freedom, physical and moral. More than half the girls go to college, many to Smith and Vassar, which credit the stiff Bible courses for entrance.

College preparatory in function and unusual in its setting,

Northwood has sent over three-quarters of its graduates to the large eastern colleges. Opened as the Lake Placid Club School, the first unit of the Club Education Foundation, the name was changed in 1927. Small classes, patronage restricted to families eligible for membership in the club, and intensive study of each boy are outstanding features, and naturally much is made of winter sports and outdoor life. Dr. Flinner, who is supported by a strong faculty, was for fifteen years head of Huntington School, Boston. See page 967.

In recent years using the military only for its value in posture training and recreation, Manlius is no longer an essentially military school. It has long sent up annually many boys for College Board examinations. Established as St. John's, a diocesan school, by the first Bishop of central New York and a group of citizens, in the buildings of the old Manlius Academy founded in 1835, it moved to the present site in 1871. The modern school was developed by General William Verbeck, head master from 1888 to 1930, under whom, in 1923, it was reorganized and the present name taken. Standards are now maintained by his son, on the staff for many years. See page 968.

Since its establishment by May F. Bennett, this school has offered advanced courses equivalent to those of the junior college that has since become so popular. Miss Bennett was perhaps the first to independently maintain her own conception of what was desirable in the education of girls. She developed specialized departments to the direction of which she called leading artists. The dramatic arts work is still under the direction of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Rann Kennedy (Edith Wynne Matthison); the music department under Horace Middleton. Fine arts, the household arts, child training which involves practical work with babies in the nursery and with little children in the nursery school laboratory, still exact work of the standard which gave Bennett its reputation. On Miss Bennett's death in 1924 she bequeathed the school to her co-workers,—Miss Carroll and the Kennedys. Today a preparatory department offers general academic courses giving some choice for the development of artistic bents, and the older group is organized as a junior college. See page 1055.

The extra-curricular life is made unusually varied and interesting, taking advantage of the location and surroundings. Instruction in small groups insures adequate college preparation. See page 972.

NEW YORK CITY, N.Y. Pop 5,620,048 (1920) 6,930,446 (1930).

The financial capital of the world, New York is the mecca which draws those who have acquired pelf, that they may display it in conspicuous waste. New York holds the purse strings of the nation. Here are controlled the great industries, public utilities and transportation systems. Naturally the controlling New York mind is legalistic and financial.

The sink of a continent, into this swirling vortex are drawn the restless and ambitious from every state and every country. In their mad rush through its narrow canyons, they seek their pot of gold, fabulous salaries or palatial penthouses. Behind the plate glass windows of Fifth Avenue is displayed the loot of centuries from every land.

The most stupendous of man's creations, the Egyptian pyramids and Karnac would appear insignificant if placed in Central Park; and London, seen from the air, flat and drab in comparison. Approaching from the sea the stranger is astounded by the pinnacled and ziggurated skyline. To the traveller by air, Manhattan seems a citadel of watch towers among the sprawling suburbs that reach out on to the neighboring islands, across the Jersey marshes, and fringe the salt water rivers and estuaries. On one of these salt marshes on the Long Island shore, a hundred million dollars is now being spent to prepare for the 1939 World's Fair whose theme is 'the world of tomorrow.'

Historically the city of the Dutch, of Tammany, the Vanderastors, of La Guardia, today the native New Yorker is a rarity. Here the handiwork of man changes as rapidly as its populace. Less than thirty per cent of the population is Jewish, though it is the greatest Jewish city in the world and a third of all American Semites live here. New Yorkers include half a million Russians and about as many Italians.

The museums of Art, Natural History, Indian Ethnology, and things Hispanic, with their matchless and rapidly growing collections, offer great educational opportunities. The public library is notable for its architecture, its location, its exhibits, and its scores of branches. The priceless collection of the Morgan Library is in a building architecturally perfect.

On Morningside Heights, the acropolis of this new world, nearly forty thousand students resort to Columbia University and its affiliated institutions, Teachers, Barnard and New Colleges. To the north the College of the City of New York has more than twenty thousand, not all Jewish. On University Heights, across the Harlem, New York University, famous for its Hall of Fame, enrolls over thirty thousand; Fordham, Catholic, near Bronx Park, about a fourth as many.

The professional and vocational schools lie generally to the south, between Central Park and 42d Street. The private schools for boys are chiefly for day pupils while many of the girls schools provide residence for those from a distance who are attracted by the varied musical, dramatic, and other advantages of the metropolis. Some schools lie west of Central Park including two or three of the oldest in the city. But the more recently established schools that appeal to the socially elect are all to the east. Brearley and Chapin are in the recently reclaimed smart region bordering on the East river.

As a matter of convenience the schools of Long Island, including Brooklyn, are treated as a group. Staten Island schools will be found listed under New York City.

To provide a more substantial education and more thorough preparation for college than the schools of the time offered, Samuel Brearley, a Harvard and Oxford man, established The Brearley School. Men prominent in educational and financial circles of New York have always been on the board. James G. Croswell, Harvard '73, was head master from 1887 until his death in 1915. Henry Dwight Sedgwick and Carl Van Doren who followed him were men of scholarly attainments and literary distinction. Since 1929 in a new building overlooking the East river, its lower floors are known as decks. Mrs. McIntosh, as Millicent Carey, came from a Bryn Mawr deanship in 1930. Among the alumnæ are women who have attained real intellectual distinction. Brearley is still in the forefront of the fashionable schools in scholastic standards, and succeeds in cultivating intellectual interests among its pupils who come from solid families of taste and culture.

Still retaining something of the dignity of a fashionable school of the eighties, though reflecting modern trends, this school was established by the late Maria B. Chapin to provide a liberal education as well as training in the social graces. Removal in 1928 to the east side water front was followed geographically and architecturally by Brearley a year later. Mary C. Fairfax, connected with the school from 1902 and a partner from 1911, succeeded Miss Chapin in 1932. Her death occurred early in 1935, within a year of Miss Chapin's. Miss Stringfellow has a somewhat lighter touch, but the school continues to cater to the older families of New York, especially those who have achieved social standing.

This is the oldest existing private secondary school in the United States, its history running back three centuries to the early settlement of Manhattan by the Dutch. For two hundred and fifty years it was maintained as a parish day school, but in 1887 it became a grammar school for both boys and girls, with a fixed tuition fee; in 1891 preparatory; and after 1894, for boys only. Since 1934, a pre-primary grade for little boys and girls has been conducted. The school has moved progressively northward as the city has developed. The Consistory of the Collegiate Dutch Reformed Church, sponsors and controls through a board of trustees. Mr. Parkhill, a former master at Lawrence-Smith, who succeeded Cornelius Boocock in 1934 has won back the support of former patrons, attracted new families and improved the equipment.

Long an independent institution, this was founded as a preparatory school to Columbia College, and like its namesake has moved progressively uptown as the city has grown. In the middle of the nineteenth century under Dr. Anthon, America's earliest scholar, it rose to highest prominence. At one time the majority of its graduates entered Columbia, but of recent years it has prepared for all the leading eastern colleges. An all day plan for supervised study and play was organized in 1930. The clientele is largely Jewish.

From the very first Miss Parkhurst's school had remarkable success. Her loyal supporters not only supplied a waiting list of several hundred each year, but built and long maintained the elaborately furnished and well equipped plant, occupied since 1929. Classes extend from infant groups through high school, the boys leaving after the eighth grade. Since 1935 there has been a one year junior college course for girls. Although not emphasized, adequate college preparation is offered. The elementary group carries out the Dalton Plan of which Miss Parkhurst is the originator, with half individual and half group work. Throughout the high school the laboratory method of individual progress is used.

Controlled and managed by Teachers College of Columbia University, this six year high school for girls with a coeducational elementary school is the original unit of Horace Mann Schools. The original building, in proximity to the parent institution, has continued in use since the removal of the boys high school to its country site in 1914. Broad education on modern lines under a staff of experienced teachers is offered. About ninety per cent of the graduates enter college, and the school is a member of the experimental study plan for college entrance without examination under the direction of the Progressive Education Association. Dr. Reynolds, former provost of Teachers College, in 1928 succeeded Henry C. Pearson.

For the first forty years Horace Mann School occupied the old school building adjacent to Columbia University which now houses the elementary department. Affiliated since its beginning with Teachers College, the school was transferred in 1914 to its present country location where all the facilities of a country day school are now available to boys in the junior and senior high schools. Since 1931 boarding boys have been provided for in the dormitory, within easy walking distance of the school. Mr. Tillinghast, principal since 1920, New England born and educated, has had broad experience and training including a year's exchange teaching in Prussia. Long active and influential in educational associations, in 1937 he was elected president of the Headmasters Association after many years as its secretary. See page 964.

This experimental school has made important contributions to modern educational thought, particularly along the lines of the creative arts and literature. Its materials in science, mathematics and the social sciences, as published by Teachers College, are numerous. The descriptive booklet of the school is a noteworthy example. The school owes its origin to Abraham Flexner and was established and long supported by the General Education Board as the experimental school of Teachers College. Otis W. Caldwell, director of the school from its inception, resigned in 1927. The school is a member of the committee on the Relation of School and College of the Progressive Education Association, of which it was one of the early members.

An outgrowth of the educational experiment conducted for eleven years in Public School 41 with the support of the Public Education Association, this is now a private school primarily interested in contributing to the solution of problems of public education. The large classes and small budget of the public school situation have been retained. The children live and work in a cooperative, rather than a competitive, atmosphere with the curriculum of the first years based largely on the study of their environment. Music and rhythms, painting, modelling, dramatics, and handicrafts are emphasized throughout. Children beyond the fourth grade must meet all the standard achievement tests. The June camp is considered an essential part of the school year.

One of the first country schools to be located near a metropolitan center, Riverdale was established by Mr. Hackett on grounds adjoining the vast open spaces of Van Cortlandt Park. College preparation has been emphasized from the first, but the curriculum has shown unusual breadth in music and more recently in art. A liberal weekend policy makes it possible for boys who live nearby to keep in touch with their families, and for boys from a distance to enjoy the educational advantages of a world center. Day boys are transported in school buses from New York and Westchester. The entire plant, valued at more than a million dollars, was turned over to a board of trustees in 1925 by Mr. Hackett, who continues as head master. Camp Riverdale in the Adirondacks has been maintained since 1912. See page 965.

RIVERDALE SCHOOL OF MUSIC, established in 1922, is affiliated, but its enrollment is not confined to pupils in the other Riverdale schools. A preparatory school member of the National Association of Schools of Music, Richard McClanahan is head.

THE NEIGHBORHOOD SCHOOL, coeducational, enrolls children from four to nine years, under Cecil C. Baldwin.

A school for the education of children of both sexes "in piety and useful learning" was founded in 1709 in Trinity Parish, New York, and was continued by the Trinity Church Corporation until 1806. Out of this grew Trinity School for boys and St. Agatha's. The girls school today is a monument to the work of Emma G. Sebring, for three years member of the faculty of Teachers College, who organized the school and was principal for thirty-two years until her resignation in 1930 when she was retired with a pension. Miss Bowden, formerly on the staff of Brearley School, has maintained the traditional high standards, modernizing the curriculum.

For thirty years Clara B. Spence held the implicit confidence of her patrons. A woman of strong and gracious personality, Miss Spence was able to live uncompromisingly up to her ideals. Even at the beginning of the century, when the social graces were of more importance, she developed in her girls something of social consciousness. On her death in 1923 the school came under the direction of Charlotte S. Baker, for many years co-principal. When in 1932 the trustees, many of them alumnae, invited Valentine Chandor to merge with Spence her own school, opened in 1917, a new era began. The spring teas and sewing classes of Miss Spence's day passed. Miss Chandor's personality and intellectual interests were stimulating to students and alumnae. A coterie of the New York socialite alumnae ran the school following Miss Chandor's death in 1935 and selected as the fifth head mistress, Miss Brockway, who had been for some years at Miss Hewitt's, and is here repeating the success she there attained. See page 1017.

Endowed in 1796 and maintained in connection with Trinity Parish until 1806, when it was incorporated, Trinity was founded over two centuries ago by the "Venerable Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts". Conducted at first in the tower of old Trinity Church as an elementary school, it has moved uptown with the progress of the residential district and has increased the range of instruction. In 1898 the corporation established a separate school for girls, St. Agatha. Under the Rev. Lawrence T. Cole, rector from 1903 to 1937, four-fifths of the graduates yearly entered leading colleges. The school's self-contented conservatism is attributable not only to its hallowed past but to its successful investments in New York real estate.

John Dutton Wright, internationally known speech specialist and advocate of pre-school training for the deaf child, founded this leading school for the education and training of deaf children. Miss Winston is assisted by a trained staff of specialists. The school has long done notable work, and its correspondence course for mothers of deaf babies is an important adjunct. Preparation for college is supplemented by intensive speech correction, auricular training, and lip reading courses, and graduates have done honor work in leading colleges and universities. Since 1934 the school has occupied its present site facing Carl Schurz Park. See page 1070.

BROOKLYN, N.Y. Alt 45 ft. Pop 2,570,440.

A huge city in itself, New York City's largest borough has varied manufactures and is also the great middle class residential suburb of the metropolis with which it is connected by huge bridges, tunnels and ferries.

The private schools serve chiefly the local residents of the borough. Two of the older schools, Packer and Friends, are in the vicinity of Borough Hall, and a mile east are Pratt Institute and Adelphi Academy. Overlooking Prospect Park Plaza are Berkeley Institute and the Ethical Culture School. Nearby is the Museum of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences. North, near the Children's Museum, is Froebel Academy. In Dyker Heights, along the southeast shore, Polytechnic Preparatory School and Shore Road Academy overlook The Narrows.

Throughout its long history this school has played an important part in local educational affairs. One of the earliest Junior colleges to be recognized by the state of New York, it has for years been a leading secondary school for girls of Brooklyn. Named in honor of William S. Packer, whose widow gave money for the building, it occupies the site of the Brooklyn Female Academy organized by public spirited citizens in 1845. Dr. John H. Denbigh, fourth principal of the school, who successfully directed it from 1918, announced his resignation in 1938.

One of the first of its kind, this outstanding school is directed by an ardent apostle of the country day movement, who was for seven years president of the Conference. An outgrowth of the preparatory department of Polytechnic Institute, the school has equipment valued at more than half a million dollars. The memorial chapel, dedicated to the boys who lost their lives in the war, cost over $100,000; the model gymnasium, $175,000. Unlike boys in many day schools, most "Poly" boys complete their preparation for college here. See page 964.

Established on the site of, and in the buildings used by the Stony Brook Assembly for summer religious conferences, the school's purpose is to provide college preparation and to inculcate the principles of evangelical Christianity. The faculty is made up of men of good educational training with a vital faith in the Christian religion. Three periods a week of Bible study are credited towards graduation. Dr. Gaebelein's influence on the boys is traceable to the same sincerity and forcefulness evidenced in his evangelical writings. He is in demand as a speaker, both in churches and over the radio, and his piano playing has been broadcast. See page 965.

This school spends the winter term of thirteen weeks in its Florida plant near Miami, in accordance with the plan conceived and carried out by its founder, Paul C. Ransom. Though in no sense a school for invalids, its climatic advantages appeal to some boys with minor respiratory ailments. In recent years college preparation has been increasingly stressed. After Mr. Ransom died in 1907, Mrs. Ransom with Levings Hooker Somers as head master developed the school with a sincerity, loyalty, and devotion to ideals which left an indelible impress. Since 1928 the school, with Mr. Wilson as head master, has been directed by a board of trustees in New York. See page 966.

Established by Dr. Frederick L. Gamage and conducted by him for a quarter of a century, this college preparatory school is a memorial to a son of George B. Cluett, a former pupil of Dr. Gamage who died while a student at Yale. In 1931 Dr. Gamage, together with three instructors who owned part interest, turned the school over to a board of trustees. A year later Dr. Gamage's son took control. In 1935 the trustees appointed Mr. Shortlidge, for many years associate head master at Choate School and more recently head master of Storm King and Tome Schools. He has increased the enrollment and secured gifts for the erection of new buildings. See page 966.

Mr. Gow established his school after twenty years experience in such dissimilar types of institutions as Choate, Nichols, and Park School of Buffalo. Here he enrolls boys who progress better under programs planned for them individually. He has had great success with the non-reader. Numerous activities are provided for, and many of the boys go on to college.

This smoothly running institution, perfectly equipped, well organized, and capably administered, enrolls girls from conservative families all over the country and prepares most of them for college. It was founded nearly a century and a quarter ago at Middlebury, Vermont, by Emma Willard, a pioneer in the education of women. In 1819 an offer of financial assistance drew the school to New York and in 1821, on invitation, it came to Troy as the Troy Female Seminary. In the next fifty years of its existence more than fifteen thousand young women were enrolled, many of whom became teachers and spread the influence of the school far and wide. Among these Mrs. Russell Sage, a member of the class of '48, was later a teacher in the school. In 1892 the school was reorganized under its present name. The architecturally beautiful home which the school has occupied since 1910 was the gift of Mrs. Sage. Miss Kellas was president of both Russell Sage College and the Emma Willard School from 1916 to 1928. She impresses all who know her as an unusually strong character, who has definitely influenced the lives of the thousands of girls who have come under her firm hand. See page 1014.

This well known Baptist school, enrolling only boys since 1908, was established as a coeducational institution and as such endowed in 1879 by its benefactor, Thomas B. Peddie, for whom it was renamed. R. W. Swetland, head from 1898 until his death in 1934, improved the faculty and made Peddie an efficient college preparatory school with excellent equipment. Dr. Saunders, who had extensive study and experience in pulpit and school, makes considerable use of the endowment for scholarship aid, and has enlarged the faculty to average one member for each ten boys. One of the great national preparatory schools, Lawrenceville has greatly increased in numbers, equipment, and popularity under recent head masters. The beginnings of the school go back to the Rev. Isaac V. Brown, a Presbyterian clergyman, who was succeeded in 1837 by Alexander H. Phillips, member of the family that founded Andover and Exeter. From 1837 to 1883 the school was conducted by Dr. Samuel M. Hamill and his brother, the Rev. Hugh Hamill.

The executors of John C. Green, an early pupil who had amassed a fortune in the China trade, purchased the school from Dr. Hamill, endowed it, and appointed as head master James Cameron Mackenzie who here for the first time in America introduced the English "house system", later widely copied by other U. S. schools. The boys below the upper form live in houses presided over by a master and his wife, assisted by one or two unmarried masters. Every house is a home unit, and there are inter-house instead of inter-class contests in athletics. The effect has been to preserve and foster individuality.

The characteristic customs and practices developed during the regime of the Rev. Simon John McPherson from 1899 to 1919, so vividly depicted in the stories of Owen Johnson, under succeeding head masters have faded as have the early Presbyterian leanings. Under Mather A. Abbott, head master from 1919 to 1934 the school plant was enlarged, the academic standards raised, and an effective system of health supervision put into operation.

Mr. Heely in his first years has stepped into the front rank of head masters. In consonance with the tradition that the character of the school changes with each new head, his initiative and energy have brought new developments. The school plant has been remodeled with funds provided by Mr. Harkness for the conference method of teaching, the interest of the alumni has been unified, and their loyalty and support of the school increased. C.R.R., B.&O.R.R., R.R.R. Motor Route 29 from Newark.

A town of wealth and distinction, with some industries, notably International Motors and Scott Presses, Plainfield is built on a gravel bed in an old lake plain at the end of a terminal moraine with the Watchung Hills to the north. The section has historic interest dating from Revolutionary times. The academic building of Hartridge School is near the center; the boarding department in a residential section, as are also Wardlaw and Plainfield Country Day Schools. •

A residential town in a country of superb estates, Princeton is not too far from the city to attract New York business and professional men. The University is more attractively presented by Ralph Adams Cram's buildings, better than most Gothic of the past few hundred years, than perhaps any other American college. Moreover, it offers all the advantages of country club life with the prestige of a college education. Miss Fine's School is in the old Princeton Inn at Stockton and Nassau Streets. The Hun Schools and Mercer Junior College are also directly in the town. The Princeton Country Day School is on the outskirts.

This oldest boarding school for girls in America, since 1911 offering full college work, was founded by the Countess Benigna, daughter of Count Zinzendorf of Saxony. Eleanor Lee, grand-niece of Washington, was among its pupils as were Chancellor Livingston's daughter, Cornelia, wife of Robert Fulton, two daughters of Nathaniel Greene and others representing the old Colonial families, Dutch, German, Quaker, French and English. Around old Colonial Hall, erected in 1748, cluster memories of the French and Indian Wars, and during the Revolution it served as a military hospital, sheltering hundreds of wounded Revolutionary heroes. The great majority of the girls continue to come from Pennsylvania, though many states are represented and loyal alumnae from all over the country continue to dower the ancient institution with gifts. Dr. Heath, clean cut, idealistic, born in the Virgin Islands of missionary parents, received his early schooling in England. After twelve years at Salem Academy and College, North Carolina, he came to Moravian in 1926 and his unusual breadth of vision and mellowness have added much to the atmosphere.

The beautiful buildings of its college, the most impressive of which are of Jacobean architecture, dominate this fashionable suburb ten miles west of Philadelphia. The town has more important private schools for girls than any community of its size in the country. Shipley occupies unpretentious buildings opposite the entrance to the college grounds. The three gray stone buildings of Harcum face, across the main street, the modern school building and remodelled stone hotel that house the Baldwin girls.

Although still emphasizing preparation for Bryn Mawr, to which it has sent some five hundred girls from various parts of the country, the school has recently widened its scope to provide for girls preparing for other colleges and for the non-college girl as well. Named for its founder, Florence Baldwin, the school was first incorporated in 1906. Miss Johnson has been the principal for over twenty years and connected with the school still longer. In 1919, during her administration, the school was reincorporated. She has built a large and efficient faculty and carries on the wholesome and sensible ideals of the founder.

This junior college, offering a wide range of courses in the liberal, fine and practical arts, has developed from a school established by Mr. and Mrs. Harcum and conducted jointly until the death of the former in 1920. A college graduate, a pupil of Leschetizky and Philipp, Mrs. Harcum, a Virginian, brings something of southern warmth to her very human relations with her pupils, and to the atmosphere of the school as a whole. In recent years she has been able to give her whole attention to her educational work. The preparatory course, restricted to high school juniors and seniors, functions as the first two years of the four year junior college, whose curriculums lead to the junior year of standard colleges or to further professional work. The sound academic training and gracious atmosphere that characterize this school have long attracted daughters of Philadelphia's élite and discriminating parents from further afield. It was established by three sisters, Hannah T., Elizabeth A., and Katharine M. Shipley, who had studied in Europe in preparation for their work. In 1911 Miss Howland, a niece of the founders, and Miss Brownell, for some years associates at the New School at Utica, became part owners and assistant principals. They held complete control from 1916 to 1932, when the school was reorganized as a non-profit corporation with the former owners as principals. Today school buses take the girls to the athletic fields on the school farm a mile and a half away. From this farm comes much of the food for the school, the serving of which is criticized and supervised to an unusual extent by the girls themselves. The curriculum is more elastic than in most college preparatory schools, and music and other cultural advantages of Philadelphia are made available. See page 1022.

Established under the guidance of Haverford College and occupying a part of its campus, the school has for years been independent of the college. The first head master, Charles M. Crosman, purchased property nearby and set up a boarding department which soon became popular. With the development of the section, however, the day school became more important, and the enrollment in the boarding department is now about ten percent of the total. Edwin M. Wilson took over the direction in 1912. A man of sound business sense, he put the school on its feet financially and increased its enrollment, usefulness, and reputation, adding to the property from time to time. Reaching the retirement age in 1937, Dr. Wilson resigned as head master, though he continues to devote much time to the finances of the school. He was succeeded by Mr. Boocock, associate head from 1934 and former head of Collegiate School. See page 976.

Independently organized with its own management, faculty, buildings, grounds, equipment, and life, this school is owned and administered by the trustees of Franklin and Marshall College. The plan for an academy for Franklin College was proposed by Benjamin Franklin as early as 1743. In 1872, nineteen years after the merger of Marshall and Franklin Colleges, the preparatory department became a separate institution, removed from the college, but near enough to secure to its students many advantages. Dr. Hartman, principal since 1897, is supported by a strong faculty. A spiritual minded educator, he is devoted to his work and maintains close and intimate contact with the boys who come largely from the middle Atlantic states. The rugged vitality of Mercersburg and its intensely democratic atmosphere date from 1893 when William Mann Irvine, a graduate of Exeter and Princeton, took over a small, local institution, half a century in existence, and with broad vision and indefatigable energy created the school as it is today.

Dr. Edwards was called to the school in 1928 on the death of Dr. Irvine. A graduate of Phillips Andover, of Williams, and the Union Theological Seminary, he came to Mercersburg as an old friend, for in his previous pastoral work he had been visiting minister to the school for almost a quarter of a century. A close personal friend of Dr. Irvine's, he had intimate knowledge of the school's problems and appreciation for its ideals and traditions. With a great number of working scholarships available to the ambitious, a large proportion of the graduates go on to college where they have achieved prominence, especially in athletics. Most prepare for Princeton, although more than a hundred other institutions have accepted Mercersburg boys. See page 974.

Third city of the nation in population, Philadelphia claims first place in the percentage of home owners. Its older families like those of Charleston have pride in their provincialism and are inordinately zealous in preserving local customs and institutions. Among the old, new-old and recent families, the names of Biddle, Widener and Wanamaker carry weight. But change has come as it must to all things. The political machine seems of late to have lost something of its ruthless efficiency. Even the P.S.F.S. (Philadelphia Saving Fund Society), which claims to be the oldest, largest and richest savings bank, now occupies a beautiful modernistic thirty-six story home.

To the outsider Philadelphia seems an unexciting place which has lent its name to scrapple and cream cheese and to a certain type of lawyer and capon. But Philadelphia is on the march. The population of the city proper has been halved in recent decades as the metropolis continues to stretch its octopus tentacles out into the country along the lines of transportation.

At the crossing of the principal thoroughfares, Broad and Market Streets, stands the City Hall, a political monument of a former generation. About Independence Square center the pre-Revolutionary landmarks—Independence Hall, with the sacred cracked Liberty Bell, and Carpenters Hall, where met the First Colonial Congress. North of Market Street are Girard College and Temple University. Southwest of the City Hall about Rittenhouse Square the old aristocratic mansions are fast giving way to shops and apartment houses. Temple University enrolls nearly 6000 students. At West Philadelphia, across the Schuylkill, are Drexel Institute with 1350, and the University of Pennsylvania with about 7500 students.

To a greater extent than in any other large city, wealthier residents have abandoned their town houses and migrated to the suburbs. Private schools have naturally followed and many are found in the attractive suburban sections of the city itself. Overbrook, to the northwest, lies partly in Philadelphia and partly in Merion. Germantown, largest of the suburban districts, is seven miles northwest of the City Hall. Here are many fine old pre-Revolutionary houses. Chestnut Hill, most beautiful of the outlying parts of Philadelphia, stretching along the wooded slopes of the valley of the Wissahickon Creek, is four miles north of Germantown. Oak Lane, east of Chestnut Hill, lies at the northern edge of the city and has attracted various day schools.

The schools in the farther suburbs are treated under their own towns. Along the Main Line, one of the most beautiful series of suburbs in the country, well known schools, including many for defectives as well as for Bryn Mawr preparation, will be found at Wynnewood, Ardmore, Haverford, Bryn Mawr, Devon, Berwyn, and Malvern. North of the city, among the Montgomery county hills, there are private schools in Rydal, Meadowbrook, and Bryn Athyn. In the outlying southern districts, private schools are found at West Chester, Chester, Swarthmore and Landsdowne.

This largest of the Friends schools in and about Philadelphia, though established for the children of Quakers exclusively, has since 1885 admitted students of all denominations. It is a successful preparatory school and is so popular as to have a considerable waiting list. Most of the graduates enter college and are now enrolled in forty of the leading institutions of higher learning. Two in four years were chosen Rhodes scholars. Mr. Yarnall, a man of vision and capacity, principal since 1908, a leader in many of the newer movements in education, has introduced sound progressive methods and modern educational practices. He has made music, art, shop work, and nature study important and has developed an active and influential parents auxiliary. A separate building for four year olds is a recent development.

Established as a private progressive school by forward looking patrons, largely Jewish, Oak Lane has since 1931 been conducted as the experimental division of Temple University. Carrying its curriculum of the activities type through the eighth grade, with an enrollment now predominantly Gentile in the primary department, significant contribution has been made in the field of the creative arts, plastic arts, music and literature. Mr. Ivins, assistant director for two years, succeeded J. S. Butterweck as head master in 1937.

As early as 1701 William Penn gave a charter to a school that had been in operation a dozen years. It is still conducted under his third charter, 1711. Richard Mott Jones, head master for forty-two years, brought the school national reputation. He was succeeded in 1918 by Richard M. Gummere, under whose administration the school developed in numbers and influence and moved in 1925 from the city to its present site. When Dr. Gummere resigned to become chairman of the Board of Admissions at Harvard in 1935, the trustees elected Mr. Knowles to succeed him. A lawyer, once a member of the Massachusetts State Legislature, he was for thirteen years master of modern languages at St. Mark's and later for four years head of Great Neck Preparatory School. Broader than most of its type, in the Penn Charter upper school each boy may concentrate in some field in which he does work beyond college entrance requirements. A cooperative individualism is encouraged in both faculty and student body and each boy above the sixth grade is expected to spend a fifth of his time on hobby subjects which harmonize with his interests and tastes.

Carnegie benefactions have done much for Pittsburgh. Homer Saint Gaudens has made it the mecca for painters of the western world. City of smoke and steel and huge wealth, of Mellon's banks and Institute, its exterior a Greek temple nine stories high, Pittsburgh has also the world's largest glass, electrical machinery, and air brakes works. The business section is on the tongue of land between the Allegheny and Monongahela rivers. Back of the highlands to the east is Schenley Park, nearly 500 acres in area. At its entrance is Carnegie Institute, the main building of which covers an area larger than does the Capitol at Washington. The director of its Department of Fine Arts has a roving commission to bring annually the best work of two continents for exhibition. The University of Pittsburgh, coeducational, with over 10,500 students, dates from 1787 and is also in Schenley Park. Duquesne University, a Catholic coeducational college, was established in 1878 and has 2500 students. Pennsylvania College for Women, organized in 1869, has about 300 students. Most of the Pittsburgh private schools are in the hilly East End Section.

Rich in traditions, this well known school is unusually well equipped to prepare efficiently for college, and to hold and develop the interests of the boy to whom college requirements are but incidental. Long regarded by its own discriminating clientele as the best preparatory school, The Hill has perhaps grown too large to justify the superlative. The story of how John Meigs, son of the founder, Matthew Meigs, coming to the school in 1876, at the age of twenty-four, in the following thirty-five years brought the school from an obscure venture starting with two teachers and twenty boys to an institution of forty masters and three hundred seventy-five boys, has been interestingly told by his biographer, Dr. W. Russell Bowie, in "The Master of the Hill." John Meigs, with a genius for organization, abounding vitality and a passionate zest for life, had extraordinary power over his fellow men and gave himself not to their bending or breaking, but to their making.

Dr. Alfred G. Rolfe, who directed the school after Dr. Meigs death in 1911 until Dwight R. Meigs in 1914 entered upon his duties as head master, again directed the school for a few months in 1922. From the faculty of The Hill has come educational leaven for many a secondary school. Since 1920 the alumni have been in control. After Dwight Meigs resigned in 1922 Boyd Edwards, long a friend of the Meigs family and now head master of Mercersburg, was head master for six years. Mr. Wendell, who has come up through the school, has been in control since 1928. A former Olympic hurdler, he has a tremendous capacity for work.

The management of the school today is shared by the faculty through three committees on administration, curriculum, and extra-curricular activities. The Sixth Form Committee supervises student cooperative government. Standards of work have always been high and few Hill graduates have failed to pass their college examinations. The Hill is proud of her boys and the families from which they come. That Hill boys are proud of their school, too, is evidenced by large gifts and the number of sons of alumni on the roster. See page 975.

The more conservative of Philadelphia's élite still send their daughters to Miss Irwin's school as in the days before 1894 when her work here won her so great a reputation that she was called to be the first dean of Radcliffe College. Sophy Dallas Irwin conducted the school until 1915 when she was succeeded by Josephine A. Natt, who remained until 1928. Under Miss Laws, former secretary-treasurer of the school, and a member of the board of directors, the school moved in 1933 from De Lancey Place to the present open site where a country day program is in force. Since 1934 complete schooling from the first grade through college preparation has been possible through the absorption of the Kyneton School, Villa Nova, which continues with its work of the first four grades in its own plant under the direction of Mrs. T. MARYLAND

BALTIMORE, MD. Alt 130 ft. Pop 733,826 (1920) 804,874 (1930).

Famous for its markets and good living, its terrapin, and America's most articulate boobiphobe, H. L. Mencken, Baltimore is a city of distinctive local color, customs, and cuisine. On the Patapsco river, just below the city, the British fleet was repulsed in Revolutionary days. Today tourists flock to the Walters Gallery, where Francis Scott Key's "The Star Spangled Banner," purchased for thousands of dollars, is preserved in the original.

Centering about Mount Vernon Place, from which rises the tall Washington Monument, are the Peabody Institute where the Peabody Conservatory of Music has its headquarters, and the Walters Picture Gallery. Between Mount Vernon Place and Mount Royal Avenue are a number of private schools. Eutaw Place leads through the residential section to Druid Hill Park, about which is another group of schools. In Roland Park, still farther north, is the site of Johns Hopkins University, established in 1876 and enrolling over fourteen hundred students. In this suburb also are the Gilman and Roland Park Country Schools, Bryn Mawr, Girls Latin, and Notre Dame of Maryland. In Ruxton is the Greenwood School, and still farther north in Towson the upper grades of Loyola High School. In Mt. Washington are Mount Saint Agnes School for girls, Mount Washington Country School for boys, and St. Paul's School.

This was one of the first progressive schools to be put on a substantial and solid basis and achieve success. It owes much of its support and patronage to idealistic and liberal Jews of the type that have done so much in times and places for this country. The staff of the school and part of the patronage continues to be of gentile origin. Eugene Randolph Smith here worked out his methods and won national prominence. Mr. Froelicher, son of one of the founders and member of a Christian family prominent in education for two generations, has carried on the progressive tradition since 1932. Margaret F. Originally established by the Misses Carter, St. Timothy's was taken over in 1912 by Miss Louisa McE. Fowler. It was incorporated in 1935, and on Miss Fowler's retirement in 1936, the trustees elected Miss Watkins as head mistress. Generally known as 'Catonsville', the school has zealously maintained its reputation for exclusiveness and attracts conservative families from the south and the large eastern metropolitan centers. Equipment and curriculum show little change, and old fashioned ideas of education for character prevail. The school circular is studded with 'must', 'not allowed'. Rules and punishments 'for any cause', 'at any time', penalize parents as well as students. The faculty is capable, the girls are well prepared for college and take an ardent interest in the limited forms of athletics allowed.

The day school is separately maintained in the town. The first head master, James Cameron Mackenzie, who had organized Lawrenceville on the house system, instituted the same plan here. He was succeeded by Abram W. Harris, later president of Northwestern University. Next came Thomas S. Baker who resigned to become president of Carnegie Institute. Murray Peabody Brush, principal from 1919, was followed in 1932 by R. J. Shortlidge. Mr. Keppel, former dean of boys at Cranbrook, has been head master since 1935. The first church boarding school of the English type in America, St. James is the diocesan school of Maryland. Dr. William Augustus Muhlenberg, who had first introduced the English Episcopal school system at Flushing, L. I., sent his chief assistant, Rev. J. B. Kerfoot, to be the first head master. Here, too, another pupil of Muhlenberg's, Dr. Henry Augustus Coit, taught until he was called to organize St. Paul's at Concord, N. H. In 1844 the school was chartered as the College of St. James. Closed during the war, it reopened in 1860 under Henry Onderdonk, who continued as head master until 1896. Seven years later when his son took charge, the name was changed to St. James School. Mr. Onderdonk is a strong and lovable personality, a great teacher and a hero to his boys. The personnel is of the best and "home life," "individual attention" and the "honor system" here are not empty phrases, but actualities. See page 977.

WASHINGTON, D. C.

WASHINGTON, D.C. Alt 25 ft. Pop 486,869 (1930).

The capital of a great democracy, its importance increases, though as yet we have no national government,—only a union of states. The smiling aristocrat now in the saddle is doing something to dim the lustre of the state governments and their purchase value. So more money is now annually spent on Washington lobbyists. Every change of administration, of course, brings new elements. Washington has seen Hoover's predilection for utility men and 'rugged individualism,' Coolidge's cool callousness, Harding's 'Ohio gang,' Wilson's academic tinge. Congressional investigation continues to disclose new methods of plunder, new rottenness in the timbers of Democracy's ship of state. But with boundless faith and hope, in spite of rapidly exhausting resources, we keep pioneering for a new future.

Few call it home except the minor or permanent government officials and employees, though many notable working scientists are permanently located here. Its citizens have no vote and take no part in its government. Even the petty details of its public school system are directed by a board appointed by the Supreme Court.

The government architecture reflects the development of national taste and constitutes a monument to the waste and graft of our representatives and contracting system. Hoover filled the center with an extravagant display of meaningless and costly pillars and quarrymen's work from influential Congressional districts. But to Taft is due the pillared and pedimented temple dedicated to the nine supreme gods recruited from corporation lawyers, servants of the utilities, lame ducks, discredited politicians, and Jewish idealists.

Among the more beautiful buildings, outstanding are the Pan American Union, stimulating and refreshing in its architectural detail and arrangement; the Academy of Arts and Sciences by Bertram Goodhue, a remarkable example of purest Greek architectural design, and the new Folger Shakesperean Library, architecturally chaste. Lincoln Memorial, with its great display of Doric columns reflected in the water, stands almost in the shadow of the great white obelisk; and beyond, the Arlington Memorial Bridge, completed in 1932, leads across to Arlington and the Tomb of the Unknown.

The museum and collections are of growing importance. The Freer is a gem. Saint Gaudens' Grief, in Rock Creek Cemetery, was to Galsworthy the most memorable thing in Washington and perhaps in America.

The attractions of Washington have made it an educational center. The Catholic Church, with characteristic foresight, has taken advantage of this for its higher institutions of learning—the Catholic University, Trinity College, and Georgetown University. George Washington University falls short of the hope and plan of the Father of his Country.

Today trade invasion of the older residential region from Lafayette Square to Dupont and Thomas Circles has driven the costly new mansions and legations to Sixteenth Street, where they extend for miles to the north. Finishing schools have flourished on this soil and some still remain in the neighborhood of Dupont Circle. The more substantial college preparatory schools are rapidly deserting this region for the hills north and west of the city. Some schools have crossed the line and have such Maryland addresses as Forest Glen, Garrett Park, Takoma Park, College Park, Silver Spring and Bethesda. The Chevy Chase Schools and The Washington Country School, although over the Maryland border, use the Washington post office. The Madeira School, long on 19th Street, moved in 1931 across the Potomac to Greenway, Virginia, thirty minutes ride from the city.

College preparatory in tone, this is a little broader and more tolerant than the average school of its type. It is characterized in the junior college as well as the lower school by individual curriculums, an informal but stimulating home life, and sympathetic understanding. The school bears the names of its two founders, Mrs. Holton and Miss Carolyn H. Arms. Frederika Hodder, Mrs. Holton's niece, as assistant principal plays an active part in the direction. See page 1061.

Conducted by the Sisters of Providence, this successful school, an offshoot of St. Mary-of-the-Woods, Indiana, has since 1922 increasingly emphasized its junior college department. Girls of all denominations are enrolled, the only religious requirement being attendance at Sunday service. The school has particularly well equipped music and art departments and gives prominence to languages, classical and modern, as well as secretarial studies and homemaking.

Sending two-thirds of its graduates to college, Miss Madeira's school was established by her in Washington after experience as a teacher in Friends School and as first head mistress of Potomac. Married in 1917, widowed ten years later, she has always been in active control. A woman of idealistic temperament, she holds strong convictions on what she considers democracy and has few snobbish tendencies. The scholastic standards of the school have always been high, though its attitude is liberal toward art and current events and the advantages of Washington. In the new quarters occupied since 1931, the country day department for the established city clientele supplements the boarding school.

From the first Mount Vernon Seminary has offered courses equivalent to two years of college work which have been accredited by leading colleges and universities. High standards and a conservative tone with modern tendencies prevail. The atmosphere is gracious. Since 1918 the school has occupied its beautiful Georgian buildings well out of the city. Mrs. Elizabeth J. Somers, founder, long the principal, and later emerita; and Mrs. Adelia Gates Hensley, for many years head mistress, both died in 1924, leaving the direction of the school to Miss Cole, for many years assistant head. In 1936 Dr. Lloyd, educated at the University of London, with an American degree, came to the school as president, bringing poise, prestige, and an earnest desire to strengthen the junior college courses. See page 1061.

About half the graduates of this Episcopal school enter college, although the academic and fine arts departments are well organized. The girls lead a simple, wholesome life spending much time out of doors. Established by the first Bishop of Washington in a building provided by Mrs. Phoebe Apperson Hearst, the school was for fifteen years under the direction of Jessie C. McDonald and Helen L. Webster, both of whom died in 1928. Miss Turner, formerly in New York day schools, has been principal since 1929. Since 1932 younger boys have been accepted in the day school. See page 1024.

Since Dr. and Mrs. Lee took over the direction of Chatham Hall in 1928, it has become one of the most popular and successful girls schools in the country. Mrs. Lee's connections as an old Dobbs girl drew to the school during the depression many families that would normally have sent their daughters to schools of higher rate. Today the patronage comes from many states, a considerable proportion from the north, and many more applications for enrollment are made than the school can accept. Scholastic standards now approximate those of the northern schools. Each year a greater proportion of the girls prepare for college,—more than half in 1937. The appeal to conservative families of wealth lies in successful maintenance of simple standards, although the rates have been raised. See page 1027.

In a quarter of a century Miss Noland has built about her own personality a school with a reputation for exclusiveness. A Virginian, a hard rider, she demands a good seat of her girls. She holds to strict ideas of 'study' and maintains long cherished ideals of combining sport with academic prowess. Well-to-do families from the north and west fancy they find here a flavor of southern aristocracy. Miss Charlotte, as she is known, without the usual college training, leaves the scholastic work to the academic head, Mrs. Thurman Fletcher, a Bryn Mawr graduate, but inculcates something of greater value, a sense of social responsibility. Her girls' work with the neighboring poor children, black and white, is supervised by a professional social worker. The atmosphere of the old south,—the negroes, the well appointed stables, the less well appointed living quarters,—permeates the school.

A distinctive small college preparatory school, unusual in its activities, Stuyvesant occupies family property and bears an ancestral name. Mr. King, a Yale graduate, for nine years a master at St. Mark's and later head master of Gilman Country School, plans flexible schedules for his boys. The outdoor life—riding, hunting, shooting, and other activities—is characteristic. The alumni, graduates of leading eastern colleges, are organized in the more important metropolitan centers. CHARLESTON, S.C. Alt 10 ft. Pop 67,957 (1920) 62,265 (1930).

Retaining much of the atmosphere of ante-bellum days. Charleston is one of the few cities in the United States that is characteristically individual. No American families are more exclusive and aristocratic than those of Charleston, however decadent or impoverished. The old plantations along the river are famed for their spring azaleas. It is the largest city in the state, an important seaport, and one of the leading cotton manufacturing centers of the south. Adjacent to Hampton Park, on the banks of the Ashley river, is The Citadel, the military college of South Carolina. On Radcliffe Street between Rutledge Avenue and Smith Street, Ashley Hall is near the river.

Miss McBee has been a leader in education in the south ever since she established this school to give southern girls the kind of education that would enable them to enter northern colleges. Ashley Hall was immediately successful, and from the earliest years sent its graduates to Smith, Vassar, Wellesley, and similar colleges. The school enrolls not only daughters of old families of the south but girls from the north, middle and far west states. See page 1026.

Science Hill has more than a century of uninterrupted service to its credit. It was founded by Mrs. Julia A. Tevis who, without endowment or resources other than from board and tuition, brought the school to a leading position. Under Dr. and Mrs. W. T. Poynter, who purchased the school in 1879, it became outstanding among schools of the section for its college preparatory work. Mrs. Poynter, in active charge from 1896 to her death in 1937, held the school to high standards, enabling it to grow and expand with the times under an efficient, college trained faculty. A daughter, associate principal of the school since 1905, has succeeded to the principalship, assisted by another daughter, Harriet Poynter, also long active in the administration of the school. First owned by a corporation who conducted it in a government arsenal, the school was sold in 1923 to C. E. Crosland. I. A. Cunningham, principal from 1925, took his boys in 1930 to Castle Heights Military Academy and announced a merger of the two institutions. Local interests, however, in 1931 brought Colonel Batts and C. A. Ragsdale from Branham and Hughes and L. U. Ragsdale from Tennessee Military Institute. D. M. Myers, co-principal with Colonel Batts, resigned in 1936. The enrollment has been doubled in the last six years and the equipment modernized.

LOUISIANA

NEW ORLEANS, LA. Alt 5 ft. Pop 387,219 (1920) 458,762 (1930).

Famous for the widely advertised picturesqueness of its old French Quarter and that other survival, the Mardi Gras, New Orleans, a hundred miles from the Gulf at the head of the Mississippi delta, is an important commercial city and one of the world's great cotton markets and seaports. Much of the city lies below the high water level and is protected by embankments. The Isidore Newman School is in the uptown residential section between Jefferson Avenue and Valmont Street. The Louise S. McGehee School is in the old Garden District on Prytania Street. In the outskirts on Metairie Ridge the Metairie Park School occupies a plantation-like estate.

For twenty years leading families of the city sent their daughters to Miss McGehee for schooling. In 1933 they purchased the school, reorganized it on a country day plan, and in 1936 engaged the present head mistress. The curriculum is flexible, the methods progressive. Most of the graduates enter southern colleges, but each year a few enroll in the north.

CINCINNATI, OHIO. Alt 490 ft. Pop 451,160 (1930).

Cincinnati owed to its 1848 German element the development of cultural interests far in advance of most American cities. Laid out in checkerboard squares, the city extends fourteen miles along the Ohio river; the residential section, home of the Tafts and the Longworths, rising to the hills. Formerly one of the most corrupt of American municipalities, Cincinnati is now one of the best administered. Outstanding among its city managers, Clarence A. Dykstra here made the reputation which secured him the presidency of Wisconsin University.

The University of Cincinnati is in Burnet Woods Park to the north of the city. Just beyond in Avondale is the University School, and still farther north at College Hill is Ohio Military Institute. Fifteen miles northeast on Indian Hill is the Cincinnati Country Day School. The Conservatory is in Walnut Hills. South in Eden Park is the Art Academy. The College of Music is nearer the center.

Laurel had its beginnings in a school opened by Miss Jennie Prentiss in her own home, which was later moved to Euclid Avenue. It was under Mrs. Arthur Essex Lyman, principal from 1904, that the Mittleberger School was absorbed and the reputation built for work of excellent standard. Now one of the leaders in its section, stressing college preparation, Laurel also offers excellent courses in music, art, and secretarial subjects. Work in the primary and intermediate grades is especially progressive in curriculum and method. There are separate residences for older and younger girls who come from eastern as well as middle western states. Miss Lake, former head mistress of Albany Academy for Girls, succeeded Mrs. Lyman in 1931. A country day program has been followed since 1928 when the school moved to Shaker Heights. See page 1029.

Dr. Peters, head master since 1908, has given a national reputation to this school, through his breadth of view and courageous stand. He has put before his boys ideals of international understanding and made his desire for world peace manifest. The skilful faculty, of high grade and long tenure, prepares a majority of the boys for Yale, Cornell, and Dartmouth. Their sabbatical half year is generally utilized for travel or study. For years carrying on a program with some country day features in its downtown site, since 1926 the school has occupied its million dollar plant on Shaker Heights. A dormitory maintained since 1896 accommodates boys either on a full time or five day basis. A summer day camp for younger boys is affiliated.

A well equipped and highly organized school, one of the most vigorous and progressive in the middle west, this was under the management of Grace Latimer Jones McClure from 1904 until her resignation in 1938. With her had been associated Alice Gladden who died in 1926 and Harriet Sheldon. The enrollment still consists principally of day students, though a boarding department was added in 1909. About three-fourths of the graduates enter college. Opportunities for outdoor activities and extra-curricular interests are many. Eventually a country day school plant will be built on a site outside the city, owned by the school and now used for sports. Dr. Shellabarger, former member of the English faculty of Princeton and a writer, comes to the school in the fall of 1938 with Mrs. Shellabarger, a native of Sweden and a graduate of the Royal Gymnastic Institute of Stockholm. The late Henry Harrison Culver founded this military school, provided the site and first buildings, and brought as first head Colonel Alexander Frederick Fleet. The school remained in the family until 1933 when ownership was transferred to The Culver Educational Foundation. General Gignilliat, made commandant in 1896 and superintendent in 1910, is a tactful and capable administrator with advanced ideas on many phases of secondary school education. Culver has won wide publicity for its progressive steps in guidance and measurement, in internal surveys and in carrying university consultants on its staff. BLOOMFIELD HILLS, MICH. *Alt 850 ft. Pop 1127 (1930).
G.T.R.R. Motor Route U.S. 10 from Detroit.*

The suburban estate of George G. Booth, newspaper publisher and patron of the crafts and arts, is about twenty miles from the center of Detroit and five miles south of Pontiac. The village of Bloomfield Hills was incorporated here in 1927 to preserve the rural character of the region.

The five educational institutions and church established by Mr. and Mrs. Booth on the 300 acre tract which was their estate, bear the name "Cranbrook," Mr. Booth's ancestral village in England. Reserving only their residence, they have given land, buildings, equipment and endowment funds to the development of Christ Church Cranbrook, Brookside School Cranbrook, Cranbrook School, Kingswood School Cranbrook, Cranbrook Academy of Art, and Cranbrook Institute of Science. The Cranbrook Foundation, created in 1926, was the recipient of virtually all of Mr. Booth's fortune, as well as substantial gifts from Mrs. Booth, totaling approximately $17,500,000. Masterpieces of sculpture and the decorative arts adorn all of the institutions, which, with the exception of the church and Brookside, were designed by Eliel Saarinen, distinguished architect and president of the Cranbrook Academy of Art, for whose work here he received the gold medal of the New York Architectural League.

Originally the Bloomfield Hills School, established by Miss Winter for young children of the neighborhood, this was taken over by the Cranbrook Foundation in 1930 and the present name adopted. It is the oldest of the Cranbrook schools and the only one antedating the establishment of the Foundation. The boys and girls are prepared largely for the Cranbrook and Kingswood Schools.

Eliel Saarinen, President; Richard P. Raseman, Secretary.

Well known artists and architects make up the faculty of this academy, directed by the celebrated Finnish architect who designed the Cranbrook buildings. Departments of modeling and ceramic sculpture, drawing, painting, weaving and textiles, costume design, bookbinding, jewelry and enameling, etc., are maintained. Certain courses are open to talented Cranbrook and Kingswood students, samples of whose work have been exhibited in various art institutes. Only advanced students are received in the fields of architecture and sculpture.

A natural history museum and research center, this was established to meet the needs of students of the several Cranbrook Schools, but its work has since been broadened. It has no students, no tuition and no teaching faculty. Notable are its observatory, natural history collections, and habitat groups.

Extraordinary opportunities for study of the arts, handicrafts, music, and sciences supplement the college preparatory and general academic courses in this school designed for two hundred and fifty boys. In its first decade, Cranbrook attracted a few students from the east, west, and south, and alumni entered fifty-five institutions of higher learning from Maine to California. The cultural and social life of the boys is enriched as a result of frequent contacts with students and faculty of the four affiliated schools. William Oliver Stevens, artist, writer, formerly senior professor of English at Annapolis, first head master, resigned in 1935. Mr. Nickerson, former head of the lower school, as dean carried the administrative burden for three years. Dr. Lindquist, a far westerner, who as professor of education at Ohio State University had for a year acted as educational adviser, was elected director in 1938. See page 984.

This girls unit, with boarding facilities since 1931, prepares its students adequately for college. As with the boys, the unusual advantages in art and science made available by the Cranbrook Academy of Art and Institute of Science give unusual color to the life. Many of the decorations and furnishings were designed and executed on the grounds by members of the art faculties. Miss Augur, who succeeded Katharine Rogers Adams in 1934, was long associate head mistress of Rosemary Hall and from 1928 academic dean of Bradford. See page 1030.

Citizens of public spirit and vision and great wealth have given this city a notable system of parks, boulevards, municipal buildings and art facilities. Cadillac, who founded the settlement here early in the seventeenth century, La Salle, who made it a stopping place on his way to the Gulf to plant Christian missions in the Mississippi valley, and Chief Pontiac have been commemorated in profit-making cars. Center of the automobile industry, its prosperity rises with the demand for cars and falls with loss of consumers buying power. Here started the bank holiday which marked our financial nadir. From the suburban Church of the Little Flower, Father Coughlin holds forth on almost anything but Christianity. From Dearborn, to the north, Henry Ford's publicists promulgate his homely philosophies. In his Greenfield Village, to which he has transported Mary's Little Lamb Schoolhouse, Cape Cod windmills, and in the Edison Institute Museum which spreads over eight acres, is his great store of American antiquities. In connection with his nearby River Rouge plant, his huge self-supporting Trade School enrolls a thousand boys.

In the city the interests of the people at large are indicated by the huge enrollment of the Cass Technical High School. Some of the older private schools are still in the city. In the beautiful country to the east and north lie great estates served by the Country Day and University Schools in Grosse Pointe, the Cranbrook Schools in Bloomfield Hills. To the west, Detroit Country Day School has occupied its present site since 1925

This oldest boys school in Detroit has been reorganized and moved a number of times to keep up with the rapid growth of the city. Since 1928 it has occupied its present half million dollar plant. Two years after its opening the school was incorporated and combined with the Detroit School for Boys which had been running for ten years. In 1914 Frederick L. Bliss, principal since 1901, resigned and a reorganization of the school, both as to finances and to faculty, was undertaken by the trustees. Mr. Fletcher was made head master in a second reorganization in 1916, under the direction of an advisory committee of its patrons.

Well organized and equipped, with a large and resourceful faculty, this institution of first rank was less affected than most Detroit schools by the cataclysm of the city's finances in 1929. Long one of the most successful and prosperous day schools in the country, it developed under the management of the Misses Liggett from the Detroit Home and Day School, established by their father, the Rev. James D. Liggett. About ninety per cent of the graduates enter college. A branch school known as "The Eastern Liggett School," 2571 Burns Ave., was opened in the eastern part of the city in 1913, providing for the growing patronage of that section. In 1925 a new addition to this was built and the older school moved over to the east side, the lower school being merged with it, making the new Liggett School. Miss Ogden has been head mistress since 1928.

Seniors in colleges which have established cooperating relations are selected by their institutions to study at the School for a term or a semester; graduate students are detailed by such colleges or may apply independently, usually for a year of study. Courses deal with various aspects of child development, family life, and nursery school teaching. Opportunity to observe and study children is provided through a nursery school, infant service, recreational clubs for school-age children, a summer camp, and cooperative relations with Detroit social and educational agencies. Experience with parent groups and families is also provided.

The second city of the country, this is the fourth largest in population in the world. At the crossroads of the nation where the transcontinental and north and south railways touch the lake routes, Chicago is the world's greatest market for agricultural products. Here the ore from the north meets the coal from the central states. And here, where the winds of the prairie sweep over the lake, political crosscurrents meet in conventions. Cardinal Mundelein, building on the German and Polish element, has scattered his red-brick parochial schools throughout the city and its environs. Since Chicago threw off the Insull domination of corrupt utilities, the gangs have passed. A corrupt government and a wrecked credit still remain, but the same public spirit that devised the material development of the lake front is today bringing about a renaissance of civic spirit.

The University of Chicago, established in 1903 on the World's Fair site and enrolling some thirteen thousand students, is in the South Side section. Here are the Harvard School for Boys, the Starrett, Faulkner and Orthogenic Schools. Southwest, and separated from the city by a golf course and a residence district, is Morgan Park, long time home of the military school of the same name and since 1935 of the Loring School. In the fashionable North Side above the Chicago river, Francis W. Parker and the Latin Schools for Boys and Girls are within the city limits.

Since its establishment, the Art Institute has played a vital part in the lives of Chicagoans, and the school, a continuation of the Academy of Design established in 1866, is one of the best equipped in the country. Under the direction of Robert B. Harshe from 1921 to his death in 1938, the scope was broadened. Courses lead to degrees in fine arts and art education. Lectures are delivered throughout the year by artists of note. Day, evening and Saturday classes offer training in the fine and industrial arts, including interior architecture and advertising. A recent development is a course in dramatic arts. A summer session of six weeks covers general courses, and special courses in art education. The juvenile department provides summer and Saturday schools.

This junior college and preparatory school is the oldest girls school in the west. Founded as Monticello Seminary by Benjamin Godfrey, an old Cape Cod sea captain who had made a fortune in eastern trade and settled here because of large land holdings, the school was organized by his friend, the Rev. Theron Baldwin, who was influenced by the ideas of Mary Lyon. In 1841 it was incorporated and graduated its first class. In its long history it has played an important part in the education of young women of the section and is appropriately spoken of as the "Mount Holyoke of the West." The large body of loyal alumnæ is organized in many associations. Under Mr. Rohrbough who succeeded Harriet R. Congdon in 1935, emphasis has been on varied creative and social activities, with special attention to the guidance program. Abba Willard Bowen, former head of Brownell Hall, is director of the preparatory school. See page 1063.

Far sighted and public spirited Chicago citizens four score years ago purchased thirteen hundred acres of land bordering on Lake Michigan and here built Lake Forest Academy. In 1913 the trustees invited "Big Boy" Richards from Hotchkiss and Yale to succeed William Mather Lewis, now president of Lafayette. The past quarter century under Mr. Richards' direction has witnessed an increase in importance and dignity of the academy, during the early years a fortress of the academic in the midst of a welter of the military. Mr. Richards has prepared for the great universities sons of western families who would otherwise have been sent to eastern schools. In 1930 he procured the necessary funds to put into operation a plan which has since been adopted by other boys schools and has successfully met the college test. The effect of this "Richards Plan" as the trustees have named it, has been to make the school work more interesting, more individualized, more economical of time and effort. But in addition, it has made education at Lake Forest more actual and more directly applicable to each boy's individual life. The visitor here is impressed with the aliveness, virility, and effectiveness of the educational process. Mr. Richards holds the unswerving devotion of his boys, patrons and trustees, many of whose names are among the most potent in Chicago. Recently there has been a broadening of the program for the mental and physical health of the individual boy. See page 985.

Winnetka is the mecca of earnest young parents who sacrifice other things to make their homes in this expensive suburb of Chicago that their children may benefit from the work of its outstanding educational attractions. Carleton Washburne has here developed and made practical a system of individualized instruction in the public schools, of which he is superintendent. In his books he has reported on education in Europe and on the educational ideals of rulers of countries round the world in a new, illuminating and interpretive way. In contrast, the brilliant, accomplished head master of the Country Day School attracts and holds the personally discriminating.

This outstanding country day school has a reputation more than local. The Francis W. Parker School of Chicago was the model on which it was founded, but under Mr. Smith's direction the school has developed independently. Through parent education a definite attempt is made to adjust the boys and girls to actual living conditions. The school is limited to an enrollment of three hundred fifty, many preparing for college, and no students are accepted in the high school who admit plans to transfer later to boarding schools. In 1938 the lower school moved into a new, especially designed building, a gift of the parents, a step toward making all departments of the school equally important.

The only school of its type and standards in the region, this was founded by the Rev. R. K. Todd, a native of Vermont and a graduate of Princeton. His grandson, the present head, is 'Skipper' to his boys. The colorful, carefree, active life with unusual opportunities for art, music, dramatics, and shop work made many boys reluctant to leave, so in 1935 arrangements were made to continue the work through college preparation. The boys naturally come from around Chicago, though half the states in the Union have been represented. With Tosebo, the affiliated summer camp, boys can be cared for all the year. See page 989.

During its long career more than three thousand boys, largely from well-to-do families of the great northwest, have been trained at Shattuck. Classed by the government as 'essentially a military school', the students must always be in uniform and are constantly under military discipline, with military training required of all. The oldest Church school and the oldest non-proprietary boys school west of the Mississippi, Shattuck was also the first private preparatory school to which a regular army officer was detailed by the government. It grew from a little day school opened in 1858 by the Rev. James L. Breck. Shattuck was the conception of Bishop Whipple, who was familiar with such schools in England as Winchester and Rugby. The school was named for an early benefactor, Dr. George Cheyne Shattuck of Boston. During the long period from 1867 to 1915, the Rev. James Dobbin was rector. The Rt. Rev. F. A. McElwain, Bishop of Minnesota, has been rector since 1916. Dr. C. W. Newhall, connected with the school for forty years, was head master from 1916 to 1936. Mr. Guernsey, his successor, trained as student and instructor in eastern schools, among them Taft, came here direct from the head mastership of Morgan School, Clinton, Conn. He heads a strong faculty of university graduates.

Today ranking among the foremost college preparatory schools of its type, Blake School traces its origin back to the year when William McK. Blake, a graduate of DePauw University, opened a tutoring school in downtown Minneapolis. Four years later, with the backing of a group of citizens, the school was incorporated. Under the supervision of Charles Bertram Newton, later head master of the Pingry School, Elizabeth, N. J., it became one of the pioneer country day schools. Mr. Alder, for seventeen years principal of Adelphi Academy and before that an instructor at Exeter and Penn Charter, was elected to the head mastership in 1926 to succeed Raymond B. Johnston. Under his administration new buildings have been erected, the athletics of the school reorganized, and the curriculum enriched and strengthened. In 1937 funds were raised which wiped out the school debt and started an endowment fund. See page 988.

The capital of Minnesota, this smaller of the Twin Cities is built on a series of terraces rising from the east bank of the Mississippi. Second only to Chicago as a livestock and meat packing center, it is also important for its manufactures. In the black marble and gold leaf lobby of the new court house stands the thirty-seven foot Indian chieftain, carved by the Swedish sculptor, Carl Milles, out of fifty-five tons of translucent Mexican onyx. Other recent civic improvement projects include a skyscraper bank building, a municipal auditorium, a hospital and a boulevard named in honor of Frank B. Kellogg. The academy has two sites—the Country Day School, west of Snelling, and the Lower School in a modern building at 718 Portland Avenue.

Under the able and scholarly leadership of Mr. Briggs, son of Dean Briggs of Harvard, this school has taken front rank in the College Board examinations. Every graduate from 1916 to 1937 has entered a reputable college; eighty per cent have gone to Harvard, Yale or Princeton; nearly one third have graduated from college with honors. For its first thirteen years the academy was conducted by C. N. B. Wheeler and F. W. Fiske as a college preparatory day school. When in 1914 it was incorporated and reorganized, Mr. Briggs, formerly a master at The Hill School and later assistant head of the Country Day School of Kansas City, was made head master and business manager, the former owners remaining on the faculty. Since 1916 the upper school has been in its present site where a country day school program is carried on. Unusual among day schools, the boys wear uniforms and devote one period a day to military drill.

Most successful of the many schools for Christian Scientists that have been started in various parts of the country, The Principia is the only educational institution for the sons and daughters of Christian Scientists that offers work from nursery school through four years of college. Established by Mrs. Mary Kimball Morgan, it has continued under her control as president of the board of trustees and that of her sons. There is no direct connection with or financial support from the Christian Science Church, but Christian Science practices, ideals and standards prevail among faculty and students. In consonance with these standards, team work between trustees, school executives and patrons is played up, and personalities are submerged. However, it is apparent even to some Christian Scientists that the school owes its great success to the organizing genius and vision of the present director, in charge since 1920. Since 1935 the college group has occupied new buildings on a four mile tract of land on the Mississippi near the village of Elsay, Ill. See page 1062.

COLORADO SPRINGS, COLO. Alt 5978 ft. Pop 33,237.

The third city of the state, Colorado Springs is at the foot of Pike's Peak overlooking a vast plateau to the east. The co-educational Colorado College, which dates from 1874 and now enrolls about seven hundred, has a notable Academy of Fine Arts and a new Fine Arts Center. Three miles northeast, San Luis School has since 1931 occupied Las Pampas Ranch, the plant of the former St. Stephen's School. Ten miles southeast, on the eastern edge of the Rockies, is Fountain Valley School.

This school was opened with the patronage of people of prominence, both east and west. Mr. Froelicher, member of a notable Baltimore family of educators, a skillful administrator with progressive tendencies, has been head master from the first. He brought with him some of his former masters and boys from Avon Old Farms. History as the story of human development and achievement is a continuous course for each boy, and science and languages are similarly related to it. Attention is given to American politics, and related subjects are so presented as to develop social consciousness. See page 995.

Since 1917 this long established school has conducted all its classes out of doors. In 1930 it moved to its present ranch site. The original building in the city is still used for a coeducational elementary day school. Progressive methods and outdoor living are stressed, and the sound academic training and preparation for College Board examinations have attracted resident students from as far east as New England. During July and August a recreation center for girls is conducted on the ranch, with all the usual camp sports supplemented by ranch activities and pack trips in the Rockies. See page 1036.

Established by the first Bishop of Los Angeles through benefactions of land and money from Miss Ellen and Miss Virginia Scripps, this is the leading church school for girls on the Coast. Miss Cummins, associated with Miss Coit at Cambridge School for Girls for seven years after graduating from Vassar, has been head mistress since 1921. Under her direction the equipment has been improved, good academic standards maintained, and the number of graduates sent to eastern colleges increased. See page 1037.

LOS ANGELES, CALIF. Alt 267 ft. Pop 576,673 (1920) 1,238,048 (1930).

This largest city west of Chicago embraces a great area from the San Fernando valley, over the Hollywood hills and the Santa Monica mountains, to the sea. The original Mexican settlement, midway between the mountains and the ocean, centered about Olvera Street. Here still stands the Church of Our Lady Queen of the Angels, dating from 1818. The attractiveness of the climate to the retired farming class of the middle west, the discovery of oil, the development of harbor facilities, the cinema and the airplane have made Los Angeles a great center of industry and commerce. Some of the established schools maintain high standards that have set the pace for the public schools which here have reached a high degree of efficiency. But private schools spring up like mushrooms and to maintain the standards, an Association of Independent Schools of Los Angeles was formed in 1932 in conjunction with the Chamber of Commerce to protect reputable schools and private school patrons.

The secretarial, trade and industrial schools are still in the business section, mainly on Figueroa Street. Preparatory schools are found in all the residential regions. South, in the vicinity of Exposition Park with its stadium seating 90,000, is the University of Southern California. Few schools remain in the tree-lined, old residential part to the southwest. Near Westlake Park, four miles west of Broadway, is Otis Art Institute. And in an older residential district is Hammond Hall in the plant of the former Orton School. Page, Cumnock and Marlborough Schools, once in open country, are now surrounded by city blocks. In Hollywood, Black-Foxe occupies the former buildings of the Urban Military Academy, and in North Hollywood is the new plant of Harvard School. To the west, a group of schools has developed midway between Los Angeles and Santa Monica Bay,—in the Holmby Hills, Westlake and its Holmby Junior College which moved from the city in 1928; the frowning red brick buildings of the University of California at Los Angeles; and the imposing Catholic institutions, Marymount for girls, and St. Mary's College for men. Further from the city Berkeley Hall School is in Beverly Hills, and Urban School has a conspicuous site on Beverly Boulevard.

Long in the city, this Church school moved to its new plant in North Hollywood in 1937. Established by Grenville Emery, a Boston man who later opened other schools on the West Coast, Harvard was taken over by the Episcopal Church in 1911 and its semi-military features retained. As the only Episcopal school for boys in Los Angeles, Harvard has long appealed to parents who wish a Church school for their sons, but boys of various denominations are enrolled. Dr. Gooden, head master since 1912 except from 1931 to 1934, carries on with the assistance of high and grammar school principals.

Sherman Day Thacher, father of the present head, a few years after he had completed his Yale law course, moved to Ojai with an invalid younger brother who needed a warm climate, set out an orange orchard, and took a few boys to tutor. Here he was shortly joined by his brother, William Larned Thacher. The school soon became known among eastern families for its interesting outdoor life and success in getting boys into the large eastern universities. After Mr. Thacher's death in 1931, the responsibility was divided between two teachers of long standing in the school and the older son, who became head master in 1936. Each boy owns and cares for a horse, selected especially for him. Weekend camping trips in the canyons, living in shacks which they have built themselves, stand out in Thacher boys memories.

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF. Pop 506,676 (1920) 634,394 (1930).

The local flavor of San Francisco, which time, earthquake, fire have not destroyed, may yet be diluted as a result of the city's new bridges; the long one to speed traffic from the mainland, the other across to the erstwhile secluded region of country estates in Marin County. But San Francisco today is still the quintessence of California and the golden west. Built on the sand dunes at the tip of the peninsula bounded by the Pacific, the Golden Gate and the Bay, its street cars must be hauled up the hill by cable. The Presidio, famous Mexican and United States military headquarters, faces the Golden Gate. Golden Gate Park, reaching to the Pacific, is unique among parks. The Chinese element has long made San Francisco's Chinatown famous. Almost equally well known is the colorful Italian colony along the waterfront.

The idea of this non-military school was conceived by a group of San Francisco business men, largely Harvard and Yale graduates, whose own preparatory work had been in eastern schools but who wished to keep their sons longer at home. Mr. Daly, a member of the staff under head masters drawn from the faculties of large eastern schools, took over the school in 1932 when it was in financial straits and put it on its feet. FOREIGN SCHOOLS

ACCEPTING AMERICAN BOYS AND GIRLS

Planned to help American parents in a preliminary selection of schools in Europe for their children, this section in previous editions has been much more detailed. Only such schools are described here as have recently indicated interest in enrolling American boys and girls.

Some of these schools will be found more fully described in the Illustrated Section, pp. 1072-1074.

The critical descriptions are incomplete and little attempt is made in this edition to convey much of the atmosphere or history of the school.

In general, the brief description incorporates only information on the outstanding courses and special features as indicated in the letters and prospectus of the school.

Other European schools, on which we have less information are found in the Supplementary Lists.

ENGLAND

Much of the data following has been furnished by the heads of the individual schools, with the cooperation, especially, of the International Schoolboy Fellowship and the American Scholarship Scheme of the English Speaking Union. Further particulars about these associations will be found in the 1936-37 edition of this Handbook.

The Munich Preparatory School, 4 Destouchestrasse, Munich. Boys 10-20. Established 1936. Leslie Dayton Bissell, Jr., Yale, American Institute, Munich University, Head Master. Fee $1160. Winter and summer sessions take advantage of the cultural opportunities afforded by the city and its environs, with which Mr. Bissell is well acquainted through many years residence. He plays an important part in the life of Americans in Munich.

Nationalpolitischen Erziehungsanstalten include thirteen cadet boarding schools, conducted somewhat along the lines of English schools, which are cooperating with the International Schoolboy Fellowship,—traveling expenses paid by the Nazi Government. A Government committee selects the 'cream of the crop' of young boys to make up the enrollment. Contrary to the general impression, these are non-military schools established to cultivate an intellectual élite.

In 1936-1937, Plön School i/Holstein had boys in Lawrenceville and Tabor, Potsdam u. Neuzelle boys in Kent, Tabor, and Governor Dummer; Naumburg a.d. Saale in Governor Dummer and Tabor; Köslin i/Pommern in Tabor; Wahlstatt i/Schlesien in Riverdale and Moses Brown; Ilfeld i/Sudharz in University School, Cleveland, and Providence Country Day School; Oranienstein b/Diez a.d. Lahn in Providence Country Day School and Tabor; Backnang in Württemberg in Loomis and Tabor. Berlin-Spandau, Shulpforta, and Bensberg were not represented in American schools in 1936-37. Exchange students, however, have been coming from Germany to Tabor Academy, Massachusetts, since 1926 and to others of the American contingent of the Schoolboy Fellowship since 1928.

Americans are welcomed in the Internatschulen in Deutschland, a list of which, supplied by the Deutschen Akademischen Austauschdienst and published in the 1936-37 edition of this Handbook is this year reprinted in the Supplementary Lists.

SUPPLEMENTARY LISTS

SUPPLEMENTARY LISTS

Here are listed, pp. 729-834, under various classifications, schools about which we have inadequate information, unimportant schools, or those from which we have received no recent report.

Where no response has come to our frequent requests within the past six months, schools are given one or two line listings without statistics. Such schools are continued here unless we have definite knowledge of their discontinuance. Fuller data with statistics of former years will be found in previous editions of the Handbook.

Under each classification schools are listed alphabetically by towns in each state. States are arranged geographically from Maine to California as throughout the book. For a list of these classifications, see the Table of Contents.

The Classified Lists of Schools to Meet Special Needs, pp. 835-885, are planned to help parents find representative groups of schools of any special type desired. These lists are not exhaustive but deal largely with representative schools in the critical and statistical text, pp. 223-726.

TUTORING SCHOOLS

The "widow Nolen" inaugurated the tutoring school to make clear to Harvard undergraduates what they had been taught. Today many schools have usurped the functions of the tutoring school and the tutor, so their numbers and incomes have decreased. Here are some of the survivors not included elsewhere in the book.

MUSIC SCHOOLS

Of the 17,000 music schools that wore impressive titles in the good old days of 1920, a large proportion, and there's tragedy in it, are today unable to pay rent for their single room or buy a one-inch ad in the local newspaper. With the growth of music appreciation, the increase in the number of symphony orchestras, the improvement in music broadcasts, and with the decline of the opera, the ambition to become a musical artiste is not so prevalent as a few years ago.

The music departments of some of the more representative preparatory schools and junior colleges are found in the Classified Lists of Schools to Meet Special Needs under Girls Schools, Boys Schools, etc.

SCHOOLS OF FINE AND APPLIED ARTS

While schools of music have decreased in number in the last decade, art schools have multiplied. Thousands of young people who formerly sought to satisfy their esthetic aspirations through music, today seek an art school or a course in interior decoration. Much noise about modern art, which has actually brought art closer to the lives of many, has further influenced this tendency. Listed here are some not found in the main portion of the book that have achieved more than local reputation.

SCHOOLS OF HOUSEHOLD ART

This greatest of all the arts is the most evasive. Nothing is more conducive to the art of living than good eating and a comfortable place to rest one's weary bones. Homemaking, eschewed by the more aspiring of our social climbing matrons, has become a phrase mouthed by fat ladies in department store and women's club courses. The leading schools of the art are to be found in women's colleges and state universities. There are few others worth mentioning except those included in the main portion of this book.

SCHOOLS OF EXPRESSION, THEATRE, DANCE

Where the grandmother satisfied her inmost yearnings in the production of a delicately browned apple pie with distinctive thumb marks around the edge, the granddaughter expresses her soul in imitating the wind blown leaf, the shaggy bear. Here are listed some of the studios in which thousands of women, who might be cultivating the home arts, are cavorting in bits of gauze. As the drama grew out of the dance and as both tend to agglomerate today, there is no need to sort out here the one type from the other.

KINDERGARTEN-PRIMARY TRAINING SCHOOLS

The kindergarten, the first progressive innovation in our perfectly Prussianized school system, also came from Germany. Modern progressive methods in the teaching of young children, resulting in the nursery school and the activity school, have made the orihodox Froebelian method archaic, so most of the old-line kindergarten training schools have passed.

BUSINESS SCHOOLS

The U. S. Bureau of Education reports a steady falling off in the number of private schools of this type, due to the great increase in the assumption by the public school systems of the functions once performed by private institutions. There are less than 600 listed in their latest report. Of the more ephemeral so-called "business colleges" there are probably upwards of 2000 conducted under private initiative, but these seldom make reports to government questionnaires. A national association has done something to set up standards for such private institutions. The more important are described in the main portion of this book.

CATHOLIC BOARDING SCHOOLS

There are 10,439 Catholic schools in the United States, enrolling 2,598,669 students of whom 105,926 are in schools of college grade, according to the latest Directory of Catholic Colleges and Schools, 1932-33, a publication of the National Catholic Welfare Conference of Washington. These figures are based on the biennial survey conducted by their Department of Education in 1930. P. J. Kennedy & Sons figures published in their Official Catholic Directory for 1935 show 9,428 schools, academies and colleges attended by 2,396,621. Of these 7,442 are parochial schools attended by 2,209,673.

Listed below are boarding schools attracting students from a distance. More widely known schools of this type are found in the main portion of this book under their respective cities.

CLASSIFIED LISTS

SCHOOLS TO MEET SPECIAL NEEDS

To help in finding schools to meet particular needs, schools of similar type are here brought together in geographical sequence. Necessarily these lists are suggestive rather than exhaustive, including only representative schools.

BOYS SCHOOLS

SPECIALIZING IN PREPARATION FOR C. E. B. EXAMS

The total number of candidates from each school who took College Entrance Board Examinations for the last four years is given. Only those schools are listed which have sent up at least ten boys during this period. Considerable decrease in number of candidates in some cases is misleading, indicating merely a change from Old to New Plan.

GIRLS SCHOOLS

SPECIALIZING IN PREPARATION FOR C. E. B. EXAMS

The total number of candidates from each school who took College Entrance Board Examinations for the last four years is given. Only those schools are listed which have sent up at least ten girls during that period. Considerable decrease in number of candidates in some cases is misleading, indicating merely a change from Old to New Plan.

COEDUCATIONAL SCHOOLS

SPECIALIZING IN PREPARATION FOR C. E. B. EXAMS

The total number of candidates from each school who took College Entrance Board Examinations for the last four years is given. Only those schools are listed which have sent up at least ten candidates during that period. Considerable decrease in number of candidates in some cases is misleading, indicating merely a change from Old to New Plan.

SCHOOLS OF FINE AND APPLIED ART

The study of art as an accomplishment for young ladies was an early 19th century development. As early as 1791 Charles Willson Peale endeavored to create a school of art in Philadelphia. The attempt, though unsuccessful, led in 1805 to the Pennsylvania Academy of Fine Arts. Summer art schools are a popular recent development. The art departments of secondary schools and junior colleges are found earlier in this section in the Classified Lists of such institutions.

SCHOOLS OF EXPRESSION

The modern hunger for means of self-expression has brought into the field of Expression types of schools little known a generation ago. Here we find schools of speech, which take the place of the former schools of oratory and elocution. Schools of public speaking, the drama, and the stage are here listed. Schools of the dance, a recent development in this country, aim sometimes for the stage. Others with their origin in schools for physical education have as their purpose the physical upbuilding and beautifying of the human form; still others, more modern in tone, are for those seeking relaxation.

SCHOOLS OF HOUSEHOLD ART

This oldest of the arts was one of the latest to acquire classrooms and methods. Comenius and Luther emphasized the educational value of household activities, and the early charity schools in England gave their girls some training. But it was the middle of the 19th century before actual recognition of the educative possibilities in the home arts was given in Europe. In the United States, Catharine Beecher published in 1840 "A Treatise on Domestic Economy." Today most high schools and preparatory schools give their non-college girls opportunity to dabble in cookery, and domestic science departments are maintained in many universities. Here are listed under various classifications specialized schools, not of secondary rank and not departments of four year colleges. Preparatory schools and junior colleges with departments for the household arts will be found classified earlier in this section.

BUSINESS AND SECRETARIAL SCHOOLS

Private business classes existed even in Colonial times. In the '30's and '40's of the last century private classes in bookkeeping increased rapidly, forerunners of the modern business schools. In the '50's and '60's chain schools were established, remnants of which exist today independently in many cities under the old names. Business departments of standard colleges and private secondary schools are not included in this list.

FOR DEFICIENTS

Defectives received no scientific care and education in this country until 1820. when idiots were admitted to the deaf and dumb asylum at Hartford, Connecticut. Dr. Edouard Seguin, a young French physician, developed a method of training of the sense organs and in 1850 opened the Seguin Physiological School now Effie Mead Gordon School at Orange, New Jersey. Before that, however, his methods had been used in the first strictly private institution in the country, Elm Hill, Barre, Massachusetts, which dates back to 1848. Latterly schools for the slightly deficient have developed and many of these admit no low grade defectives.

BULFINCH HALL (1818)

PHILLIPS ACADEMY, Andover, Massachusetts.

CLAUDE M. FUESS, Litt.D., L.H.D., Ph.D., Head Master.

Phillips Academy, founded in 1778 by members of the Phillips family, is the oldest incorporated academy in the U. S.

It is international in its representation and democratic in its life and spirit. Its essential appeal is to students of serious educational purpose and high moral standards.

To be eligible for entrance, candidates must present satisfactory school records and evidence of good character, and must take examinations for assignment to classes.

Dormitory accommodations and supervision enable students to pass by gradual and natural stages from the paternalism of home life to the freedom of college. Classroom sections are small, and there is one teacher to every nine boys.

Williams Hall and Rockwell House, with their close supervision, offer attractive and helpful surroundings to the young boy just leaving home for his school career.

The latest additions to the school plant, designed by Guy Lowell and Charles A. Platt, include a recitation building, dormitories, a library, an art gallery, a hospital, a church, an auditorium and administration building, and an inn.

Extensive playgrounds and athletic fields are available for the use of students. All the boys are required to take regular gymnasium work or engage in sports. The Gymnasium, the Swimming Pool, and the Case Memorial Building, providing complete facilities for athletic activities during the winter, are in charge of a physical director and several assistants.

Endowments and scholarship funds are available, providing pecuniary aid for more than a hundred scholarly and ambitious boys of limited means.

WASSOOKEAG SCHOOL. Bryant Hill, Dexter, Me.
LLOYD HARVEY HATCH, Head Master.

The SCHOOL and the summer session at the SCHOOL-CAMP are fully accredited. A flexible Program, adjusted to the interests and aims of the Individual and directed by a Faculty of one Teacher for every three Boys, facilitates distinctive College Preparation. A two-year academic schedule can be completed in one calendar year. No Graduate has failed to enter College on scheduled time.

There is an excellent natural setting for Winter Sports.

COBURN CLASSICAL INSTITUTE, Waterville, Me.
HUGH A. SMITH, B.A., Principal.

With a tradition of over 115 years of high scholastic standing and Christian citizenship, Coburn specializes in one thing: thorough preparation for College or Technical School. Instruction is personalized and adapted to individual needs, insuring superior education at a very moderate cost.

Proximity to Colby College provides opportunity for attending Lectures, Concerts and Drama. A well balanced program of extra-curricular activities gives training in Athletics, Music, Dramatics, Public Speaking, etc. Teams are maintained in Football, Basketball, Track, Baseball and Tennis.

THE CLARK SCHOOL, Hanover, New Hampshire.

CLIFFORD PEASE CLARK, Ph.D., Founder.

FRANK MILLETT MORGAN, Ph.D., Director.

Maintaining high standards of instruction, The Clark School offers thorough preparation for College or Business, and inculcates in the Boy those basic principles and ideals which tend toward the development of manly character. Although the School maintains a completely separate existence, proximity to Dartmouth College affords opportunity for athletic and educational activities available only in a college community.

Four courses are offered—a four-year College Preparatory Course preparing for College Board Examinations and accredited to Colleges admitting by Certificate; a two-year Intensive Course for Boys over 16 whose college preparation has been neglected; a one-year Preparatory Course for high school graduates; and a two-year Junior College Business Course.

With enrollment limited to sixty and an average of five students to a class, individual attention is assured. The Instructors, specialists in their subjects, are chosen for fitness to lead young men as well as for scholastic ability.

Under the supervision of the Athletic Director every student takes daily exercise. The School is represented in Football, Basketball, Baseball, Hockey, Golf, Tennis, and Winter Sports.

Write Mr. Sargent, 11 Beacon Street, Boston.

TILTON SCHOOL AND JUNIOR COLLEGE, Tilton, New Hampshire.

JAMES E. COONS, M.A., LL.D., Head Master.

This sound old New England School has for ninety-one years successfully prepared Boys for College and for Life. Today a staff of twenty-six instructs in Junior School, Grades Seven and Eight; Upper School; and Junior College, with two year college courses in Business Administration, Arts, Science, Music, Physical Education, and Social Studies.

The extensive Campus in the foothills of the White Mountains has facilities for all Athletics. Winter Sports are featured.

VERMONT ACADEMY, Saxtons River, Vermont.

LAURENCE G. LEAVITT, B.S., A.M., Head Master.

Vermont Academy is a college preparatory school with a special cultural program for the non-college boy. On the thirty-six acre campus are eleven modern buildings, tennis courts, pond, playing fields.

Athletics are coached by the faculty, who are chosen for personality and interest in boys as well as teaching ability. Winter sports and an Outing Club are especially emphasized and expert instruction is given in skiing.

Work in dramatics and publication of a school paper supplement the classroom English. Study and appreciation of Music is encouraged. A friendly social life is maintained between boys and faculty.

HOLDERNESS SCHOOL, Plymouth, N. H.

REV. EDRIC AMORY WELD, Rector.

Holderness, in the foothills of the White Mountains, is a five-year College Preparatory School offering also a General Course for non-college Boys, appreciation of Art and Music, and Crafts. The dormitories, of modern fireproof construction, are situated on a beautiful hill overlooking the Pemigewasset Valley. There are all Team Sports, as well as golf and riding. Under the leadership of an expert Ski instructor from Bavaria, special interest centers in Winter Sports. Small classes promote a spirit of friendliness and helpfulness between masters and boys.

PROCTOR ACADEMY, Andover, N. H.

J. HALSEY GULICK, Head Master.

Besides the fully accredited College Preparatory Course, the Academy features an entirely separate and individualized plan for those who for one reason or another are not going to College. It is not a vocational course, but a boy is initiated to a varied curriculum with the idea of discovering and developing his latent capacities.

The Academy is limited to fifty boys which assures small classes and individual work.

There is an intimate relation between the masters and boys, not only in the class room work, but in all other phases of the school life.

All seasonal sports are offered but during the winter months the School is particularly known for its skiing.

Write Mr. Sargent, 11 Beacon Street, Boston.

NEW HAMPTON SCHOOL FOR BOYS,
New Hampton, New Hampshire.

FREDERICK SMITH, A.M., Principal.

New Hampton, in the Pemigewasset Valley, is a place where a boy may live a wholesome, normal life much in the out-of-doors and where he will be taught how to study and be trained to think for himself

Hard work and hard play under careful guidance account for the success of New Hampton graduates in entering the Colleges of their choice and in achieving excellent college records.

EMERSON SCHOOL FOR BOYS, Exeter, N. H.

EDWARD E. EMERSON, A.B., Head Master.

Mrs. MABEL H. EMERSON, A.B., Principal.

The Emerson School for Boys 7-17 offers thorough preparation for Exeter, Andover and other leading Secondary Schools, and graduates entering Exeter have had marked success.

The School equipment includes spacious houses of Colonial design and a 12 acre Athletic Field. Winter Sports include Skiing, Coasting, Skating, Hockey, and Tobogganing.

Next to sound scholarship, comradeship with instructors is emphasized. The faculty has been discriminately chosen.

For School and Camp Information and Catalogs

TABOR ACADEMY, Marion, Massachusetts.

W. HUSTON LILLARD, A.M., Litt.D., Head Master.

In the old whaling town of Marion on Buzzards Bay, Tabor Academy, an endowed school, prepares boys for new world conditions. Combining fascinating new features with the best of the old traditions, the school attracts boys of strong character and serious purpose from all over the country and abroad.

Thoroughness and concentration through small classroom groups, and an attractive program of physical training, including sailing and cruising, are distinctive features.

Tabor is non-sectarian, cosmopolitan, and democratic. It prepares boys for all colleges.

Wholesome living and regular exercise for all have combined to give the school an excellent health record.

Although all students live in close contact with their house-master, attention is given to the necessity of preparing the older ones for the unprotected life which lies ahead of them.

The Summer Program during July and August offers both academic and nautical programs.

Write Mr. Sargent, 11 Beacon Street, Boston.

MANTER HALL SCHOOL, 71 Mt. Auburn at Holyoke St., Cambridge, Mass.

JOHN C. HALL, Head Master.

Founded in 1886 by William Whiting Nolen, well known to many generations of Harvard men for his efficient and successful methods of instruction, Manter Hall is one of the oldest and best known unendowed schools in America. An exceptional curriculum prepares boys and girls for College Entrance exams.

The work is planned and adapted to the demands of each student's problems. The School has enjoyed a high reputation for overcoming successfully special difficulties of its students.

Each instructor is a specialist in his subject and has an exhaustive knowledge of the requirements of the College Entrance Board in that subject. Of the sixteen thoroughly competent instructors, each of the following has taught in the School ten years or more: Courtney Bruerton, Ph.D.; John C. Hall, B.S.; Charles A. Hobbs, A.M.; Charles H. Mergendahl, Ed.M.; James A. Reeves, A.B.; Hollis Webster, A.M.; and J. Rowe Webster, A.B.

The building, designed for the unusual purposes of Manter Hall, offers dormitory accommodations. Classrooms and laboratories are small, well lighted and ventilated, intended for Manter Hall's small group teaching method.

Facilities for exercise comprise tennis, squash, swimming and rowing. Because of the School's exacting scholastic standards, no organized teams which require intensive application and exhausting practice are allowed to represent the School.

The fall term opens on October 3, 1938. The summer session begins on July 6, 1938. The School is, however, open throughout the year, and students, because of the individualized method of instruction, may enter at any time for any period of time.

THE LAWRENCE ACADEMY, Groton, Mass.

FRED CLIFTON GRAY, A.M., Principal.

Founded in 1793 in an attractive New England town 36 miles from Boston, this School, with an excellent and enthusiastic teaching staff, successfully prepares Boys 12-19 for College. Each Boy's courses are determined by his individual need. The Certificate is accepted by Colleges so admitting and the work is approved by the New England Certificate Board.

Athletics, although compulsory, are not over emphasized or commercialized and great care is exercised for the physical comfort and well being of the student body so that the atmosphere of the Academy may be pleasant, wholesome and inspiring. Board and tuition $1000. Scholarships for many Colleges.

THE LONGWOOD DAY SCHOOL,

36 Browne Street, Brookline, Massachusetts.

ROBERT LINCOLN CUMMINGS, Principal.

GRACE L. SEALE, Assistant Principal.

Incorporated 1936, not for Profit.

Young boys here work and play under the influence, guidance and supervision of specially trained, sympathetic and understanding teachers. Classes from kindergarten to three years from College thoroughly prepare for the leading College Preparatory Schools and especially for the Secondary Education Board examinations. There are men teachers above the Fourth Grade. Girls are admitted to Kindergarten and first Four Grades.

The Program includes many self-motivated, purposeful activities that grow naturally from the boys' interests and needs. Playground activities are carefully supervised. A special department is devoted to the Arts and Crafts. Music is included in the program, with opportunity for studying the piano and violin. French is given a prominent place in the curriculum.

Each morning the school meets for Chapel services conducted by a Clergyman who is also a member of the faculty, teaching History and Literature. Religious Education, interdenominational in character, is included in the program.

THE HUNTINGTON SCHOOL FOR BOYS,
320 Huntington Ave., Boston, Massachusetts.
CHARLES H. SAMPSON, B.S., Ed.M., Head Master.

A well equipped Private Day School of the conservatively progressive type, the student body is divided into five forms. Boys enrolled in the School are preparing for the leading colleges not only in New England but throughout the country. The School has the privilege of entering boys in College by the certificate method. Complete preparation for the College Board Examinations is offered in all courses.

While scholastic attainment is primarily emphasized, the School does not neglect proper attention to the complete development of the individual boy. Every boy is expected to participate daily in some form of physical exercise, including organized play, sports and games.

A coeducational summer session is for those who wish to make up conditions in grammar and high school subjects and for those who wish preparation for the September examinations.

The equipment available includes Classrooms of standard size, Science Laboratories, a complete Gymnasium with three Basketball Courts, Swimming Pool, Running Track, and six acres of Outdoor Playing Fields.

WILLISTON ACADEMY, Easthampton, Mass.ARCHIBALD V. GALBRAITH, Head Master.

Williston was founded in 1841. During its ninety odd years it has sent thousands of students to college, well prepared to cope successfully with the problems of college life. Today it stands as one of the few well-endowed New England Schools that are exclusively College Preparatory.

Williston is located in the heart of New England, on the College Highway, fifteen miles north of Springfield. Noteworthy among its equipment is the new Recreation Center, with rooms devoted to student activities, the gymnasium, and an excellent swimming pool.

The atmosphere of Williston is wholesome, democratic, and sincere. The School encourages hard work and fair play. Of utmost importance are the experience and ability of the masters who are most loyal to the best interests of the School and of the boys under their influence.

Opportunities for self-help are offered and scholarships are awarded on the basis of character and high standing.

THE FESSENDEN SCHOOL, West Newton, Mass.

HART FESSENDEN, A.B., Head Master.

Since 1903 The Fessenden School has prepared boys for the great secondary schools. Its purpose is to build in, at an early age, habits of good work and square play and responsible citizenship that will carry over to the years ahead. Its educational policy rests on the theory of small classes and graded divisions, so that a boy, with others of like attainment, can progress without boredom or discouragement at his own best rate. A large faculty makes it possible for the masters to concern themselves with each separate boy. One member of the faculty, with long training in this important field, devotes all her time to remedial work in reading. Music, art, manual training, and current events are part of the regular curriculum. Extra-curriculum activities include the Dramatic Club, the Glee Club, the Press and Science Clubs, the Machine Shops.

In their athletics, as well as in their studies, the boys have the encouragement of working with others of their own group. There are four squads in football and baseball; soccer for those who prefer it; junior and senior golf and tennis tournaments; basketball, squash, wrestling, and boxing in the gymnasium; hockey and roller-skating on the rinks; coasting and skiing on the hill. The boys must take part in some form of athletics, and the manner of their playing is considered as important as their skill.

The health routine of the school is under the direction of an eminent Boston pediatrician.

Within ten miles of Boston, the school is easily accessible. It stands on a hill overlooking a golf course, and the property includes forty acres of land.

EAGLEBROOK SCHOOL, Deerfield, Massachusetts. C. THURSTON CHASE, JR., A.B., Head Master.

Thorough academic preparation for all the leading secondary schools is fundamental in a boy's life at Eaglebrook. The Head Master and a large faculty sympathetically study and guide his personal growth — physical, educational, and social — in a homelike and happy environment.

Physical development and medical care are given expert attention by a specially qualified Resident Pediatrician and by a Resident Nurse. The new Allen-Chase Infirmary pictured below offers modern medical facilities.

Training and participation are available in a variety of sports. Besides football and baseball, in which a majority of the students compete with other schools, Eaglebrook offers skiing, hockey, swimming, soccer, tennis, basketball, riding, shooting, fishing, and hiking. The facilities for skiing are unique.

Extra-curricular activities include music (piano, instrumental, band, orchestra, glee club), arts and crafts, dancing, printing, journalism, library work, photography, nature study, radio, and other hobbies.

The Town Council, The Hearth, the School Bank, and the School Store, as well as other phases of community service and student government, contribute to development of character and personality.

While conveniently accessible to main north-south and east-west railroad and motor routes, Eaglebrook enjoys a beautiful mountainside location above a town of historic New England tradition, providing an ideal environment for the growing boy.

GOVERNOR DUMMER ACADEMY,

South Byfield, Massachusetts.

EDWARD W. EAMES, M.A., Head Master.

Governor Dummer is the oldest endowed boys' boarding school in the United States. In 1761 the Lieutenant Governor of Massachusetts Bay Colony, William Dummer, bequeathed his farm of 360 acres with the income therefrom, to establish a grammar school for boys.

Thirty miles north of Boston, just off the Newburyport Turnpike, in the beautiful rolling North Shore country, the Academy retains much of the charm and tradition of old New England.

Governor Dummer Academy is a genuinely small school of about 135 boys and 19 masters. This makes it possible for the head master and faculty to devote an unusual amount of study and attention to each boy and to maintain a friendly and homelike school life. About half the resident students come from homes outside the State.

A large majority of the boys enter college, but the enrollment is not limited to college preparatory students.

The oil painting of the Governor, here reproduced, hangs in the Mansion House, built by him about 1716, and now occupied by the head master's family.

BEACON SCHOOL, Wellesley Hills, Massachusetts.

WILLIAM V. TREVOY, A.M., Director.

Beacon is an unusual College Preparatory School, where subjects are made interesting and life is inspiring. There is no formality about any of the class work. The purpose is to make the subject stimulating, to make the information stick, and to get every boy to take part voluntarily.

The large country estate is ideal in location. The boys are given opportunity to participate in the social and other interests of the community, and proximity to Boston makes it possible for classroom work to be supplemented by the cultural and recreational activities of the city.

Special opportunities in Art and Music are offered; the School Orchestra is directed by a member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The Literary Club fosters creative writing; the Science Club visits factories, radio stations, laboratories; the Art Club, public and private collections in Boston; the Dramatic Club produces several plays each year; the Editorial Board gets out a School Magazine.

While most of the seventy-five boys prepare for College, a general High School Course is offered, and special courses are available in Business Training. One teacher for every ten boys assures careful study of the problems and the progress of each individual.

All Sports featured by secondary schools are given due attention,—Football, Baseball, Basketball, Hockey, and Tennis. Some suitable form of exercise is required of each Boy.

The outstanding feature of the School is the development of judgment, responsibility, and self reliance on the part of the boys through the important part they play in the actual management of the School.

DEERFIELD ACADEMY, Deerfield, Massachusetts.
FRANK L. BOYDEN, Amherst; Ped.D., LL.D., Director.

Deerfield, founded in 1797, is one of the leading Schools for boys. Several of its buildings date from Pre-Revolutionary days. Its ideals are true to the old traditions of scholarship and moral training, but the Academy of today is thoroughly modernized and completely in touch with the life of the times.

The four year Course of Study corresponds to that of the senior high school, and prepares students for any College or University. The School Certificate is accepted by all Colleges admitting without examination. The Boarding Department is exclusively for boys.

Dormitories are splendidly equipped, as are the recently completed Science and Academy Buildings and the Gymnasium.

Fields, hills, and streams are part of the School Campus, and each student participates in some form of daily athletic exercise and sport,—Baseball, Hockey, Football, Tennis or Basketball.

Glee Club and Dramatics are popular extra-curricular activities. Each year members of the Senior Class present a Shakespearean comedy as part of the regular Commencement exercises.

A Deerfield boy is offered thorough College Preparation and a wholesome social life with his fellows.

BERKSHIRE SCHOOL, Sheffield, Massachusetts.

SEAVER B. BUCK, A.B., Harvard, Head Master.

This college preparatory school occupies an estate of three hundred fifty acres, four miles from Sheffield, at an elevation of nine hundred feet on the eastern slope of Mt. Everett, overlooking the valley of the Housatonic.

Graduates enter the leading colleges of the east. The course of study covers a period of five years in preparation for the C. E. B. examinations or for certification. In addition to the regular college requirements, opportunity is offered for the study of music, art, dramatics and science.

Study hours are treated as of first importance, and are directed with the utmost care. The limited number of students and proportionately large faculty insure careful consideration of the individual needs of the students.

The location among the Berkshire Hills has resulted in the development of two organizations somewhat unique in eastern schools. The Berkshire Outing Club and the Berkshire Ski Club, each under a skilled director, have united in making many miles of trails over the Taconic Range, where hiking and skiing in their respective seasons supplement the organized athletics of the school.

Opportunity is given to every boy to take part in some sport, competitive or otherwise, best suited to his physical development and interest. The competitive sports include football, hockey, baseball, soccer, track, tennis, basketball and skiing. Unless excused by the school physician, each boy is required to participate daily in vigorous exercise.

Scholarships in limited number are awarded yearly to deserving students.

THE FAY SCHOOL, Southborough, Massachusetts.

EDWARD WINCHESTER FAY, A.B., Head Master.

Founded three-quarters of a century ago to prepare boys for St. Mark's, today Fay's curriculum fits for such schools as Groton, St. Paul's, The Hill, Milton, St. George's, Choate, in addition to the four-year schools like Andover and Exeter.

In the upper forms boys are separated into divisions, generally on the basis of scholastic ability. They work in groups of even ability, an arrangement which provides opportunity for more careful study of individual talents or difficulties.

Situated in a quiet country town, Fay's location combines the freedom of open country with accessibility to Boston. On the extensive grounds are several football and baseball fields, a six-hole golf course, four tennis courts, and an outdoor swimming pool which serves as an excellent hockey rink in winter. Thus facilities are provided for sports in which every boy participates.

Fay endeavors to provide for complete development of the boy, physically and mentally, and to lay a foundation for education in its broadest sense—to inculcate the principles of integrity and to teach self-reliance.

PORTSMOUTH PRIORY AND SCHOOL,
Portsmouth, Rhode Island.

VERY REVEREND DOM J. HUGH DIMAN, O.S.B.,
Prior and Head Master.

HENRY H. HOBBS, A.B., Hobart, Asst. Head Master.

The Priory School, opened in September 1926, is attached to Portsmouth Priory, a daughter house of Fort Augustus Abbey in Scotland belonging to the English Benedictine Congregation.

The School has been guided from its start by two well defined aims: first, to give Catholic boys a thorough training in their religion; second, to provide a general education fully as good on its secular sides as that of the best non-Catholic schools of similar type. The courses lay the foundations of a broad and genuinely liberal education.

As a secondary and more concrete goal to be attained, boys are prepared for the College Entrance Board Examinations. Ability to pass satisfies a reasonable and well understood test met by all the boys at or before the end of their course.

The School is divided into six Forms: in the lower half the work is about the same for all. Beginning with Form IV a choice may be made between Greek and German. Some further freedom of election is frequently permitted. This freedom increases the next two years and is governed by a student's fitness to throw the emphasis of his work either on the Ancient Classics, Modern Languages, or Mathematics and Science.

On the Island of Rhode Island, 22 miles south of Providence and 8 miles north of Newport, the School occupies 120 acres of beautiful country overlooking Narragansett Bay. There is every facility for Football, Soccer, Baseball, Basketball, Skating, Tennis, Sailing and Water Sports, Boxing, and for Golf in a nearby club. Under the "House Plan" the School is divided into two houses, each with its own library, common rooms and all that provides a natural and pleasant centre for daily life.

NELSON HUME, Ph.D., Head Master.

MOST REV. MAURICE F. MCAULIFFE, D.D., Bishop of Hartford, Patron.

Canterbury School, founded in 1915, is a College Preparatory Boarding School for Catholic boys. It is conducted by a Corporation of prominent Catholic laymen: Henry O. Havemeyer, Clarence H. Mackay, James A. Farrell, Terence F. Carmody, Nelson Hume, James Cox Brady, Jr., and Hubert McDonnell. It maintains the highest standards of discipline and scholarship, and gives a sound training in the doctrines and practices of the Catholic religion.

The Head Master and all the teachers are laymen. The chapel and religious services are under the direction of a diocesan priest appointed by the Bishop. The boys, from eleven to eighteen years old, represent the best type of American youth.

The school grounds, 135 acres at an elevation of 500 feet, are beautifully and healthfully situated, and provide space for Football, Baseball, Hockey, Track, Tennis, and Golf. There are three dormitories: North, built in 1928; Middle, completed in 1937; South, built in 1927. A Gothic Chapel was finished in 1928. The Gymnasium (1924) contains locker-rooms, basketball floor, squash courts, and a 75-foot swimming pool.

Enrollment is limited to 95 boys. The School is remarkable for its excellent spirit of discipline and study, its pleasant and home-like atmosphere, its fine equipment, the character of its boys and masters, and its success in the College Board examinations.

JOHN BRITTAIN BIGELOW, A.B., Head Master.

ELIZABETH BIGELOW ABBOTT, M.A., Ed. Director.

Established by the late Reverend Frank H. Bigelow and Mrs. Bigelow to give young boys the best Elementary Training for outstanding Preparatory Schools, the Rectory School provides careful supervision and individual attention in a homelike atmosphere.

A large faculty makes it possible for the school to have small classes and to follow closely the development of each boy. Boys who are weak in the fundamentals are tutored singly by competent instructors. In addition to the standard subjects, Art, Handwork, Music, and Dramatics play an important part in the life of the school.

Living in comfortable, sunny quarters, the boys are given the care and attention which they would receive in the best regulated private home. The health of the boys is regarded as of major importance. The School Nurse gives constant attention to the physical welfare of every boy. The clear, pure air of Pomfret contributes to the excellent health record.

Two hundred acres of athletic fields, open hillsides and woodlands give opportunity for all sports. A full afternoon of play out-of-doors is the rule. The Gymnasium is used on rainy days.

Mrs. Frank H. Bigelow, co-founder, lives at the school and continues her interested oversight of the boys.

THE CHESHIRE ACADEMY, Cheshire, Connecticut.
(Formerly Roxbury School)

A. N. SHERIFF, Head Master.

Cheshire Academy has attained marked success in College Preparation by emphasizing the individual importance of each student. Following are the salient features.

FLEXIBILITY OF ORGANIZATION.

Instruction is in small classes, usually approximating six students. When advisable, boys may be taught alone or in groups of two or three. Students' Programs are arranged and revised to fit their individual requirements and capacities, as determined by careful study. The aim is thoroughness, and speed; the methods employed, by elimination of aimless effort and by stimulation to intellectual initiative, resourcefulness, and enthusiasm, result in rapidity of progress.

WELL-ROUNDED TRAINING.

Daily supervision of each boy is painstaking, but such as to encourage self-reliance, manliness, and self-respect. Close contact with masters of understanding is used to arouse students to a sense of their own inner power and to a willingness to assume responsibility. An important goal is the development of each boy's potentialities of mind and body.

Although non-sectarian, the school, in cooperation with parents, practices a sympathetic attitude toward the maintenance of each boy's religious observances, whatever his faith.

Physical Training is provided by the use of an adequately equipped Gymnasium and Athletic Fields. Students all participate in healthful recreation, and a great majority engage in Competitive Sports under the instruction of competent coaches.

Extra-curricular activities are maintained for the promotion of a generally healthful spirit.

Write Mr. Sargent, 11 Beacon Street, Boston.

THE CHOATE SCHOOL, Wallingford, Connecticut.
GEORGE C. ST. JOHN, Head Master.

The underlying purpose in the foundation of Choate was the desire to prove that the life of a family and the life of a school may be effectively combined; that a boy, while gaining the benefits that any good school must provide—efficient teaching, manly discipline, systematic exercise, and association with boys of purpose—need not lose the intimate, personal influence that should characterize his home—a genuine interest in his individuality, a friendly and compelling contact with maturer points of view, and an unconscious development in appreciation of all that “culture” stands for. Through the growth and organization of forty-two years (thirty of them under the present Head Master), this has been the distinguishing ideal of Choate; and the School of today is planned, and the personality and character of its masters hard sought, to give to its larger number of fellows both the same training and the same “atmosphere” that the Founders created for the four boys who made up the original school.

Above all the School’s purpose is to instill the work habit and high motives.

THE MAIN BUILDING

THE TAFT SCHOOL, Watertown, Connecticut.PAUL F. CRUIKSHANK, A.B., Head Master.

The object of the School is to give boys a sound training, physical, mental and moral, and to make them strong, manly and healthy men. A thorough preparation is given for any College or Scientific School.

The course of study covers four years, and it is desirable that a boy enter as early as possible in the course. Twelve is the minimum age for the lowest class. Admission examinations are required in all cases.

The number of masters makes it possible for them to be in close touch with all the boys. The life of the older boys differs in its regulation from that of the younger classes.

Religious exercises are held each day in the Bingham Auditorium. Sunday morning school service is conducted in Christ Church, Watertown.

The School instruction aims at more than thorough College Preparation. Classes are small enough to enable instructors to judge of the thoroughness of each boy's preparation of the day's work, to insist upon his best efforts, and to give him such supervision as is necessary.

Physical development is in charge of a regular master of the School, who has had special training and devotes all his time to it. All boys are expected to take vigorous part in athletics, unless parents request that they be excused. Football, Baseball, Basketball, Hockey and Soccer comprise a part of the formal athletic program.

Recent endowment has made possible several additions to the school plant. A new Infirmary and Service Building; the Charles Phelps Taft Hall containing Library, Common Room, Upper School Study Hall, Classrooms, and Dormitories; and the Bingham Auditorium have recently been constructed.

Pomfret School holds one of the foremost places in the field of Secondary Education. It furnishes sound learning and Christian education by instruction in all studies required for admission to University or College, but this particular objective is not its sole purpose. It develops throughout its Course thorough training for those planning to enter into active work upon graduation.

The Five Year Course of Study corresponds to the work offered in Junior and Senior High Schools. Applicants to the first form should not be under twelve years of age. Small classes, directed by able instructors who are all specialists in their subjects, make possible a maximum of personal attention and direction.

The extensive School Grounds have an ideal site in the country town of Pomfret. Full athletic and recreational equipment provides for all Sports, Games and Physical Exercise in which each boy takes a vigorous part.

Pomfret continues to carry out the ideal of its founder, that of fitting boys to enter College or Business with the most sound background—mental, moral and physical.

On a hilltop in the quiet village of Washington, the country location and the altitude provide a healthful environment. The hills and wooded valleys, trout brooks, and little river make for an appreciation of the out-of-doors and appeal to all the boys.

The six year course of study conforms to the recommendations of the Secondary Education Board. Most of the graduates go on to college. The program provides for small classes and for frequent conferences between teachers and boys.

Upper and Lower Schools are separately housed.

Informal outdoor activities, as well as such sports as Football, Soccer, Hockey, Skiing, Basketball, Baseball, and Tennis, are organized for younger as well as older groups and, under experienced coaches, complement the academic work. Intramural as well as interschool schedules are planned for junior as well as first squads.

Individual religious growth is encouraged. There are daily prayers in the school, and boys attend Sunday services in one of the village churches. Respect for self and for others is earnestly cultivated in all forms of activity as an incentive and aid to sound work and honest living.

REDDING RIDGE SCHOOL, Redding Ridge, Conn. KENNETH BONNER, Litt.B., LL.B., Head Master.

This college preparatory boarding school for boys has inaugurated a novel system of education. The traditional college preparatory curriculum is arranged in five successive one-year courses, so that one major subject is presented each year, the other subjects which are taught being related to it. With a more comprehensive grasp of the few subjects studied, it is believed that the boy will be better prepared for successful work in college.

Only boys thirteen or fourteen years of age, who are preparing for college, and who plan to remain throughout the course, are eligible for entrance.

A well-planned program of sports and extra-curricular activities is offered. Near Bridgeport and Danbury, easily accessible to New York, Redding Ridge has a healthy, invigorating climate.

A small school for 120 boarding boys, Westminster offers a six year course preparatory to any College or University in the country.

Preparation for entrance to College is held to be of less consequence than preparation for success in College and later life, so that emphasis is placed on teaching boys how to work and how to think for themselves. Every effort is made to make the boys find satisfaction in hard work and in a simple, friendly Christian way of life.

A master for every seven boys, a quiet country location, easy access to Hartford, every facility for outdoor sports are important features.

OXFORD ACADEMY, Pleasantville, New Jersey.

JOSEPH M. WEIDBERG, Head Master.

The Oxford Academy of Individualized Education, limiting its enrollment to fifteen students, is an outgrowth of the Weidberg School which has an imposing twenty-eight year record of success.

The Oxford Academy is particularly indicated for those students who have difficulty with the mass instruction used in preparatory schools. An individualized method of instruction is formulated for each student after tests discover his weaknesses and capabilities. If accepted, a student may be enrolled at any time of the year and is in a class by himself. With the Socratic-psychological method our students save time; learn to study and concentrate; develop character, initiative and the ability to think; and enter the best colleges, where they obtain enviable records as students and leaders.

The Oxford Academy, occupying its own beautiful mansion, has a country location with a spacious campus overlooking a bay, affording opportunity for all sports, land and water, and is situated on Route 40, one mile east of Pleasantville and five miles from Atlantic City.

While education is individualized—each student is a class by himself—sports and social activities are group-planned to stimulate competition and build up a social viewpoint.

OLD MEETING HOUSE

THE LEBANON SCHOOL, New Lebanon, New York.CHARLES H. JONES, A.B., Head Master.

A well balanced curriculum organized to meet the entrance requirements of any College or University is offered to a limited number of boys from twelve to eighteen years of age. Boys who are not candidates for college may receive a thorough training in the fundamentals.

This school, started in 1932, on property bought from the Mount Lebanon Shakers, lies on the western slope of Mount Lebanon in the Berkshires (1100 feet), just over the Massachusetts border, nine miles from Pittsfield, Massachusetts, and twenty-six miles from Albany, New York. The three-hundred acre estate with its rolling hills and level athletic fields makes an ideal campus for year-round sports, and the fireproof brick dormitories contain large rooms, well-lighted and comfortable.

For every student some type of congenial physical expression is found. Athletics of all kinds are encouraged and opportunity for creative and constructive work is offered. But the main purpose of the school is to develop the capacity of the individual boy for living with his fellows and assuming the responsibilities of school life. Hunting and fishing in the woods and streams nearby are under the direction of a member of the faculty and are available to boys with their parents' permission.

THE LAWRENCEVILLE SCHOOL,

Lawrenceville, New Jersey.

ALLAN V. HEELY, B.A., M.A., LL.D., Head Master.

In the main stream of American democratic education throughout its long and vivid history, Lawrenceville has since 1810 drawn boys from all parts of this country and abroad, and from a diversity of social and economic backgrounds. The objective is to fit selected boys for leadership in American life.

The House System encourages individual aptitudes through its small groups of boys. The life is friendly and informal, the relations between boys and masters close. The House is the centre of social life and of various intra-mural activities.

The School accommodates four hundred seventy-five boarding pupils in buildings supervised by resident masters. For the youngest boys the Lower House provides a special regime. Seniors, separately housed, are expected to exhibit the self-reliance necessary for successful College achievement.

The round-table method of instruction, extending to the classroom the principle of small-group education on which the House System is based, encourages free discussion and individual initiative in an informal setting.

Lawrenceville is non-sectarian. A number of scholarships are available. Parents and boys should if possible visit the School before applying.

JAMES I. WENDELL, M.A., Head Master.

An endowed institution, conducted not for profit, The Hill School is administered by a Board of Trustees composed of alumni and friends through a Head Master appointed by the Board.

Thorough College Preparation is supplemented with opportunities for cultural development. The wide variety of courses include Music, Art and Handicrafts. Daily periods are provided Boys needing extra help. Special stress is given the careful direction of extra-curricular activities—Debating, Musical, Dramatic and Literary Clubs, and three School Publications.

The material equipment of The Hill, outstanding among Preparatory Schools, includes Classrooms, Laboratories, Dormitories, Gymnasium, Athletic Fields, Swimming Pools, a recently completed Science Building, and a Hobbies Building which encourages the wise use of leisure time.

The School trains for a high level of scholastic efficiency through consideration of the Boy's individual needs and capabilities and his physical development. Exercise is required of all, and the Athletic Program includes practically every form of outdoor and indoor sport. A preventive medicine program since 1922 has produced unparalleled health records.

Applications for admission must bear the favorable endorsement of, or satisfactory reference to, alumni or parents of present or past members of the School. Generous scholarship aid is available through the Alumni Association Foundation Fund of $2,500,000, part of which is devoted to this purpose.

BISHOP OF WASHINGTON, President.

REV. ALBERT HAWLEY LUCAS, M.A., D.C.L., D.D., Head Master.

St. Albans, the National Cathedral School for Boys, was established in 1909 by the gift of Mrs. Harriet Lane Johnston, niece of President Buchanan and hostess of the White House during his administration. It is part of the Protestant Episcopal Cathedral Foundation of the District of Columbia.

Four miles northwest of the Capitol, in the Close with its 67 acres of meadows and woodland, St. Albans overlooks the City of Washington and beyond to the hills of the Potomac.

College Preparation is stressed,—not by cramming for examinations in the last few years, but by laying a broad and generous foundation in the early Forms and insisting on accuracy and thoroughness.

The Plant includes Upper and Lower Schools with classrooms, laboratories, libraries, dormitories, infirmary; art, manual training, music and play rooms; and a new $200,000 Activities Building ready in the spring of 1938.

The athletic field is the largest in the city of Washington, and in addition the School possesses eleven tennis courts.

The Faculty is in residence.

STUYVESANT SCHOOL, Warrenton, Virginia.

EDWIN B. KING, M.A., Yale, Head Master.

An hour by automobile from Washington, Stuyvesant is on high ground in the beautiful Piedmont section of Virginia—healthful, accessible, a section renowned for its fox-hunting and other outdoor sports. These the boys of Stuyvesant enjoy.

The six year course of study as outlined by the Secondary Education Board prepares for the College Board examinations; but strict adherence to the Form system is not required. Each boy has his individual needs and abilities considered, and his course of study outlined accordingly. A limited number of smaller boys are received into the Lower School.

Riding, as well as the more usual football, baseball, boxing, tennis, etc., are supplemented by weekend hikes and camping trips, for which places of nearby interest—the peaks of the Blue Ridge, the Skyline Drive, the Caverns of Luray, the battlefields of Manassas, Wilderness, Chancellorsville, etc.,—give stimulating objectives. Frequent trips are made to Washington to the houses of Congress, to the government buildings, to the museums and galleries for which the Capital is famous, and to Arlington and Mount Vernon.

The home atmosphere is strong, happy, and wholesome. It is rather that of a large well regulated family than of an institution.

RUDOLPH D. LINDQUIST, Ph.D., Director.

GEORGE T. NICKERSON, B.S., Dean.

Cranbrook, a boarding and day school for boys, was founded and endowed by Mr. and Mrs. George G. Booth in 1926. Situated about twenty miles from downtown Detroit, it is the largest of the six cultural and educational institutions for which these donors provided gifts in excess of $17,500,000.

Instruction, primarily college preparatory, is offered in grades seven through twelve. A post-graduate course is also given. The curriculum is enriched by exceptional opportunities in the arts, crafts, music, and sciences. Teaching is directed toward developing boys individually. The faculty averages one instructor for every nine boys and is made up of men possessing the personality and training to deal effectively with boys of intermediate and high school age.

Natural facilities, together with extensive playgrounds, football, baseball, and soccer fields, tennis and handball courts, hockey rinks and track, encourage year round sports. Athletics are planned to reach every boy. Coaching is done by instructors who work, play, and live with their pupils. A resident physician, graduate nurse, with a fully equipped infirmary, and distinguished consultants, take care of students' health. Design and adornment of all buildings fulfill the donors' ambition to provide for education in an inspiring beautiful environment.

The resources of The Cranbrook Institute of Science and The Academy of Art are available to boys especially interested in sciences, arts, and artistic handicrafts.

Cranbrook School is affiliated with the Episcopal Church but aims at a religious and moral atmosphere in no way sectarian.

LAKE FOREST ACADEMY, Lake Forest, Illinois.

JOHN WAYNE RICHARDS, A.M., Head Master.

Differing from the prevailing type of school in the Middle West, since 1857 this national College Preparatory School for boys has maintained educational standards on a par with those of the best Eastern institutions.

Lake Forest prepares for College and for Life — in scholarship, character, physical and mental health. Every boy's course is planned to meet the requirements of his chosen college. The School desires only those students for whom it can do most — boys with a commendable spirit of manliness, honor and self-respect; with mental capacity to progress in their studies.

The Richards Plan in Education, inaugurated in 1930, uses unique and different methods in developing interest, enthusiasm, independent thinking, concentration, efficiency, and power of study. It has greatly improved scholastic achievement and has enabled graduates to maintain high marks in College.

Each subject in the daily schedule is allotted ninety minutes — the first half devoted to class work, the second for preparation of the next day's work in the Classroom under the supervision of the teacher. Each day a new subject comes first on the "staggered, rotating schedule" so that no subject has precedence or preferred position. Every fifth period is given over to independent written review and research on the pupil's own responsibility. The Study Hall Library is equipped to interest boys in good reading outside the curriculum.

In a beautiful residential suburb of Chicago, Lake Forest has homelike, friendly and normal surroundings. The boys rooms are colorful, comfortable and attractive, and they have the privilege of decorating them.

Afternoons are spent at Golf or Tennis, on the Athletic Fields or in the Gymnasium with its Swimming Pool. Scientific physical training and opportunity for team competition for every boy. Real work is available in Physical and Health Education.

TODD SCHOOL FOR BOYS, Woodstock, Ill.

ROGER HILL, Head Master.

Todd is an Activity School where Boys live and where education is made the product of their own activities. Although the curriculum is progressive in general approach and richness of program, fundamental subjects are not neglected, and class work is vitalized to the highest possible degree.

Standardized achievement tests show Todd Boys well above the average for their grade, and in their actual yearly achievement in factual matter and academic skills 21% above the average Illinois public school boy. Classes are from Grade I through High School. College preparation is stressed, and nearly all Todd graduates go on to College, about 60% entering the large eastern institutions.

Each Boy expresses himself in some line of useful or artistic endeavor. A Shop for Woodworking and Textiles and Model Yacht building, Studios for Art, Painting, the Camera Club, the Farm with its Kennels and opportunities for Animal Husbandry, the Printing Press on which the Boys publish their own illustrated Catalog,—all offer fields for colorful activity. Trips in the 'Todd Land Yacht' to Boston and New York, Sailing Regattas, and weekend Riding and Cycling Trips are popular pastimes.

The unusual equipment includes ten buildings on the fifteen acre main campus, a 170 acre farm easily accessible, separate hospital cottage, music building, glass covered swimming pool, theatre with modern stage equipment, toboggan slide, a stable for twelve horses, large athletic fields, gymnasium, etc.

Founded ninety years ago as a home school, Todd is still that, providing a hundred Boys with opportunity for joyous, profitable living and development of native talents and interests.

The needs of each boy are studied, individual attention provided, and thorough preparation for C.E.B. examinations given. Nine masters supervise the forty-five boys drawn from all parts of the country. New students are selected by the Director who travels extensively in June and September. Special railroad cars, supervised by the School, bring students from New York in September and return them in May.

Each boy owns a horse. Polo, camp and pack trips, and other recreational activities with horses, Riflery under careful supervision, Tennis, Basketball and various contact sports are enjoyed. Fishing and exploration trips are taken to interesting Arizona points, as well as to Old Mexico. Boys with communicable diseases cannot be considered for enrollment.

ARIZONA DESERT SCHOOL, Tucson, Arizona.

ALAN LAKE CHIDSEY, M.A., Head Master.

This School specializes in the care of boys eight to fifteen who would benefit from Arizona's dry and sunny climate. The enrollment is limited to thirty-five so that a homelike atmosphere may be maintained and the health and studies of each boy be given individual attention. A proportionately large number of married faculty members have their homes in the School and these are centers of individual and group activities.

The curriculum is designed to meet fully the requirements of the best preparatory schools. It combines accepted traditions of American education with progressive features of modern educational theory and practice, including a broad standard testing plan. The program of studies is kept elastic in order to meet each boy's needs. Advancement is made as rapidly as the individual is able to do the work.

The School's location in a wide stretch of untouched desert at the foot of the Catalina Mountains ensures protection from cold winds and permits a vigorous outdoor life throughout the winter. The school building, of Mexican architecture, is built around patios and planned so that the sun reaches every room. Each boy has his own well-furnished room and is responsible for keeping it in order. He is also responsible daily for carrying out assigned jobs such as wrangling horses, raking patios and taking care of equipment.

Every boy owns his own horse. Polo, short pack trips, conventional sports such as touch football, baseball, tennis and volley-ball, and an evening hobby hour in many fields of interest are features of the School life. A rodeo in which all the boys participate is held at mid-year.

No one suffering from a communicable disease is admitted.

LOS ALAMOS RANCH SCHOOL, Otowi, New Mexico.

A. J. CONNELL, Director.

Comprehensive attention to physical, mental, and recreational development is given boys who need added strength and stamina during their years of growth and those who wish to enjoy a broad program of outdoor sports and activities.

In the healthful climate of northern New Mexico, 35 miles northwest of Santa Fé in the pine timber belt of the Jemez Mountains, the school's program takes advantage of the combination of altitude, dry atmosphere, and abundant sunshine.

The curriculum covers six years previous to College and is planned to give a background of cultural knowledge and discernment, and to develop intellectual interests and desire for further study. Boys progress by subjects rather than by years.

Riding is the chief extra-curricular activity; proficiency is gained with both western and eastern equipment. Horses are assigned individually to each boy. Two afternoons a week may be devoted to training, mounted games, or optional rides. Saturday trips are taken to nearby points of interest; two cabins make convenient bases for weekend trips to more distant points.

Athletics are intramural, suited to the development of the boy, with skating and skiing from December through March.

The School is organized as a troop of the Boy Scouts of America. The boys are self managing in school and recreation.

Write Mr. Sargent, 11 Beacon Street, Boston.

EVANS SCHOOL, Tucson, Arizona.

EDWARD M. CLARKE, M.A., Head Master.

On a four hundred acre site in Southern Arizona, an elevated region noted for its healthful climate, the oldest (35 years) of the Arizona ranch schools prepares successfully for the C. E. B. examinations and for colleges admitting by certificate. The regular course is six years, but a post-graduate course allows for an additional year before college.

The Head Master, New England trained, with his young and experienced faculty, maintains the standards of the best Eastern schools. Classes are small.

Adventure and recreation are found in ranch life. Each boy has his own horse, and supervised instruction is given in polo and cowboy sports. Pack trips give thrills of the Old West. Touch football, tennis, baseball, and swimming add variety to the health program. The school newspaper, dramatics, hobby club, and dances round out a balanced program.

THE FOUNTAIN VALLEY SCHOOL OF COLORADO, Colorado Springs, Colorado.

FRANCIS MITCHELL FROELICHER, Head Master.

This Six-Form College Preparatory Boarding School for 85 normal, healthy boys 12-18, organized under joint East and West auspices, is ideally located. It offers a mild and dry climate for boys in their formative years, and familiarizes them with a magnificent mountain country among people of liberalizing customs and traditions. It is not a ranch school.

The School was founded to offer boys a wider experience than can be secured by continuous school and college work in the East or elsewhere. It presents sound preparation for colleges requiring C.E.B. Examinations, taken at the school each June. An attempt is made to breed a general interest in the Social and Political Institutions of the Country. A tutorial system ensures close, friendly relationship, homelike atmosphere.

Athletic opportunities include Football, Baseball, Gymnasium, Tennis, Swimming, Ice Hockey. Horses are kept in the School Stables. A log cabin in Rock Creek Canyon (9000 ft.), is used for weekends and as a base for mountain climbing.

GEORGE M. KENDALL, Assistant Principal.

Occupying a beautiful 200-acre estate facing Mount Monadnock in southern New Hampshire, the Kendall Hall School offers opportunities for a healthful outdoor life while providing instruction of high standard and watching intelligently over the many-sided needs of the individual girl.

At Kendall Hall a girl may prepare for college entrance by College Board Examination or by Certificate. Or she may follow the General Course and take Music, Art, or Domestic Science. In either course her classes are small and the method of instruction personal and direct.

Through every detail of her development, her well-being is a matter of constant concern. Her social life is sane and normal. She spends much of each day out-of-doors at Tennis, Riding or Field Sports; at Skating and Skiing in the winter months; and in the warmest weather at Swimming in the outdoor pool. Kendall Hall actively fosters her cultural development through frequent, well-presented talks on Music and Art, and through the occasional trips it provides to Boston museums, theatres and points of historic importance.

ABBOT ACADEMY, Andover, Mass. · 1829-1938.

MARGUERITE HEARSEY, Ph.D., Principal.

In a beautiful setting in historic Andover, Abbot, though well launched in its second century, is as young as its youngest student, for its traditions are reinterpreted into terms of contemporary life and are found to be invigorating and satisfying for the modern girl.

The School grounds of twenty-five acres include lawns, woods, playing fields, and a private pond. There are excellent facilities for Golf, Riding, and Skiing, as well as the usual sports.

The School offers a four and a five year course, both of which may be entered at any year for which the student is qualified, though preference is given to those entering for more than one year. Both courses may lead to college entrance, but the five year course offers opportunity for emphasis on Art or Music, and provides a general cultural education for those who do not plan to go to college as well as preparation for further study in the Arts.

The Arts—Music, Art, Dramatics, and the great heritage of the humanist tradition—literature, modern and ancient history, science are so presented as to prepare girls not only for college but for a life the specific demands of which cannot be foreseen.

The basic principle in the conduct of the School is the development, under the guidance of wise friendly teachers, of tolerance, imagination, clear thinking, and self reliance.

SAINT MARGARET'S SCHOOL, Waterbury, Conn.
Miss ALBERTA C. EDELL, A.M., Principal.

Every successful school must offer pleasant surroundings, adequate facilities, capable instructors, thorough training, and a wide range of courses and extra-curricular opportunities.

This is true of Saint Margaret's. A visit to the School would convince one of its obvious physical qualities; records in most of the well known women's colleges show the emphasis on College Training and the thoroughness of the preparation.

Saint Margaret's offers more: Encouragement to each girl to become an individual. Through the drama, the dance, writing, or some other field of activity she is helped to discover and develop within herself something worthy of expression. Hard work, clear thinking, reasonable living, wide interests, and sincerity of purpose are stressed.

Saint Margaret's is conservative in that it is based on what in the past has been found valuable in education for life; it is progressive in that it looks to the future and accepts new methods and new ideas once they are proved sound.

EMMA WILLARD SCHOOL, Troy, New York.

MISS ELIZA KELLAS, LL.D., Principal.

Emma Willard School will begin its one hundred and twenty-fifth year in September, 1938. Its ideals are true to the traditions of scholarship and moral training but the school of today is thoroughly modern and completely in touch with the life of the times. Its essential appeal is to students of serious educational purpose and high moral standards.

To be eligible for entrance, candidates must present satisfactory school records and evidence of good character. Assignment to classes is made on the basis of the previous record. A faculty of over forty permits instruction in unusually small sections to which girls are assigned according to their aptitude.

The school prepares students for any college or university, and its certificate is accepted by all colleges admitting without examination. There is also a broad General Course for those who do not wish to enter college.

The school aims to combine with scholastic efficiency consideration of each girl's individual needs, correction and direction of physical tendencies, formation of right habits of study, and maintenance of social and moral conditions favorable to the development of fine character. Special stress is laid upon the careful direction of extra-curricular activities: Musical and dramatic clubs; two school publications.

Physical training is required of all. Complete equipment, providing unusual opportunities for recreation and physical development, includes a modern gymnasium, swimming pool, bowling alley, tennis court, badminton court, hockey fields, soccer field, archery range, indoor and outdoor basketball courts, and roller-skating hall.

If possible, parents and prospective pupils should visit the school before making application.

DOROTHY BROCKWAY, M.A., Head Mistress.

As a day and resident school for girls from Kindergarten age through High School, The Spence School has enjoyed an excellent reputation since its establishment in 1892 by the late Clara B. Spence. In 1929 the School moved to its new fireproof building overlooking Central Park where a maximum amount of light and sunshine is enjoyed. In 1932 Miss Chandor's School was joined with The Spence School in this new building.

Two hundred and fifty pupils are accommodated without crowding in the spacious building. Resident students are accepted in the five upper classes for full time residence and for a five day plan.

The School awards its diploma for the successful completion of Senior work in the College Preparatory Course and in the General Course. Appreciation of all the Arts is cultivated as a necessary adjunct to gracious living and the School takes advantage of the rich store of material, artistic, historical and scientific, which New York has to offer.

Physical development is fostered through various sports. The School conducts a Saturday Playground in Mount Kisco.

FOXHOLLOW SCHOOL FOR GIRLS, Rhinebeck, New York.

AILEEN M. FARRELL, M.A., Oxon, Principal.

Foxhollow School is on the Hudson River about ninety miles north of New York City. The loveliness of the property and the charm of the house provide a perfect setting for the cultural aims of the School. A continuity of social existence so often broken in upon by four years passed under institutional conditions, is maintained by a genial homelike atmosphere.

Suiting the best traditions of country life, a simple tone pervades everything at Foxhollow. The girls have certain weekly household duties in connection with the care of their own rooms.

Foxhollow looks carefully to the needs of each student who is in no way hampered by the usual ills of competitive class work. Following the trend of Progressive Education, interests are centered upon the integration of subject matter. Certain periods of civilization are studied in sequence through their history, literature, art and music, with the aim of drawing from such correlated work the basic principles of culture and ethics that measure up to the demands of any age. Such work has proved more than adequate in preparing girls for college.

Chief among the many out of door activities is the riding. Without extra charge the girls have expert ring instruction, pleasant hacking and cross country riding, under the supervision of Marie Louise Thompson of the New York Riding Club.

Write Mr. Sargent, 11 Beacon Street, Boston.

DWIGHT SCHOOL FOR GIRLS, Englewood, N. J.

MISS FRANCES LEGGETT }
MRS. CHARLES W. HULST } Co-Principals.

Dwight School, founded in 1880, offers College Preparatory and special courses to girls from the First Grade through High School. It has always maintained a high standard of scholarship and its home life is happy and wholesome.

The unusual opportunities afforded by its nearness to New York, as well as its location in the country, present special advantages in Music, Art, Drama and Physical Education.

A well-selected General Course is also offered.

ST. JOHN BAPTIST SCHOOL, Mendham, N. J.

Accepting fifty Resident Girls, this School emphasizes College Preparation but also offers General Cultural Courses in Music, Dramatics and Art. Accredited by the State of New Jersey, the School is also accredited by the Middle States Association. Interesting extra-curricular activities supplement academic work.

On a commanding site among the New Jersey hills, nearly 700 feet above sea level, the School occupies a new fireproof building of early American style. The 26-acre estate offers unusual opportunities for a healthful outdoor life. Each Girl is required to participate in some form of athletics daily. Basketball, Tennis, Hockey, Archery, Riding, etc., are available.

KENT PLACE SCHOOL, Summit, New Jersey.

HARRIET LARNED HUNT, A.B., Smith, Principal.

REBECCA LOCKE MIXNER, A.B., Mt. Holyoke, Asst.

Sound in academic training from Primary Grades through College Preparation, Kent Place has been especially successful and is highly recommended by the leading Eastern Colleges for Women. Although about ninety percent of the Girls prepare for College, Kent Place offers a General Course to those who do not plan to enter a major college. Emphasis is placed on the Arts. Individual instruction is given in voice, piano, and violin. The Glee Club and Dramatic Club are unusually active.

The combined advantages of proximity to New York City and opportunity for wholesome outdoor life are available to girls at Kent Place. The nine buildings on the twenty-two acre estate include a School House with skylight studio, a spacious Gymnasium, and Mabie House, a modern fireproof Dormitory, in which most suites are arranged with connecting baths.

Health, poise, and the spirit of fair play are emphasized in all athletics—field hockey, tennis, soccer, basketball, skating, coasting, skiing and riding.

The purpose of the School is to achieve high standards of scholarship and character, and Kent Place girls have acquired the reputation for doing well whatever they attempt to do.

Write Mr. Sargent, 11 Beacon Street, Boston.

THE SHIPLEY SCHOOL, Bryn Mawr, Pa.

ELEANOR O. BROWNELL } Principals.

Work and play productive of intelligent alertness and physical well-being are offered, and girls enjoy athletics and dramatics as well as their studies. Students are trained in their work so that College Board Examinations are looked upon only as incidentals and not as the aim of the courses. A limited enrollment insures individual attention. The School Farm provides space for playing fields and supplies poultry, vegetables and milk for the school table.

THE HARTRIDGE SCHOOL, Plainfield, N. J.

EMELYN B. HARTRIDGE, A.B., L.H.D., Principal.

A College Preparatory School of high standing, but recognizing the needs and capacities of the non-College Girl, Hartridge does not limit its interests to the academic. The School has a warm and human atmosphere. Health and freedom from strain are considered of primary importance. Successful achievement in some field is made possible for every Girl. Individuality is promoted, standardization discouraged.

The Lower School, conducted on the latest progressive plans, gives sound preparation for the Middle and Upper Schools.

The extensive and beautifully laid out grounds are equipped for a variety of Sports, and Riding is featured all year.

ERIC ROGERS, Assistant Director.

Here live about 45 boys and 35 girls from 12 to 18 years of age, intellectually curious, willing to work hard, most of them preparing for College. Men and women of unusual personal and intellectual capacity make up the faculty.

Ten weeks of summer travel in Europe stimulate interest in Modern Languages and enrich the students' experience. Art, Music, and Drama are respected and eagerly participated in. Farm life in which the students may take an active part is closely integrated with the life of the School.

SCARBOROUGH SCHOOL, Scarborough, New York.

F. DEAN McCLUSKY, Ph.D., Director.

This Country Day School, in a setting of the greatest natural beauty on the Hudson, has a Boarding Department for boys and girls 5-18. Full or five day boarding may be arranged.

Scarborough successfully prepares for College and is fully accredited by Colleges admitting by Certificate. Progressive but not extreme, its curriculum has breadth and depth. Classes range in size from 10-25. Students are taught how to study.

The life of the School and its varied activities are under the jurisdiction of an elective Student Council of eight. "Athletics for all" is the policy of the School.

Physical education is required of all.

THE ETHICAL CULTURE SCHOOLS, 33 Central Park West, New York City.

DR. JOHN LOVEJOY ELLIOTT, Rector.

DR. V. T. THAYER, Educational Director.

The first free Kindergarten in America was established in 1878 by Dr. Felix Adler, Founder of the Society for Ethical Culture and Rector of the School until his death in April, 1933. From this small beginning the present complex institution has developed. The foundation principles are coeducation, a rich and varied course of study, all practicable freedom in the selection of work, careful attention to the physical welfare of children, the cultivation of serious intellectual interests, the fostering of the spirit of progress, and the development of a broad ethical conception of the place of the individual in society.

THE ELEMENTARY SCHOOL, 33 Central Park West, accommodates boys and girls from pre-kindergarten through the sixth grade as well as the Teacher Training department with a three year course for Kindergarten and Primary Teachers.

THE FIELDSTON SCHOOL is situated on seventeen acres of land at Riverdale, just inside the northern boundary of New York City. It includes a Middle School (junior high school), and an Upper School with College Preparatory courses which may include courses in Art, Business and Homemaking.

THE FIELDSTON LOWER SCHOOL is an elementary school housed in a new building in the Fieldston School grounds which provides a setting unusually well adapted to the needs of children beginning with the pre-kindergarten child of four and continuing to the pre-adolescent of ten (Grade VI).

DR. CHRISTINA STAEL VON H. BOGOSLOVSKY.
DR. BORIS B. BOGOSLOVSKY.

This progressive open air country school, 38 miles from New York, for boys and girls 5-18, includes primary grades to college, thorough college preparation, music, arts, dramatics. Flexible groups provide unusual opportunities for academic and creative work.

Boys and girls live with companions not only of their own age, but of varied ages. Daily living under such conditions in a family atmosphere makes for character training and social adjustment of a sort difficult to obtain in a place where children mingle only with those of their own age. Students are grouped according to their social age, but a flexible schedule and large staff allow for individual instruction, and permit classes to include members of several groups where this is desirable.

Cherry Lawn, with its twenty-eight acres of woods, lake, field and stream, provides the environment in which the conditions of the good education may be readily realized. Activities that demand shelter are carried on indoors.

Cherry Lawn is an outdoor school. Students sleep on screened and sheltered porches and study and play outdoors. The health record fully proves the value of this regime.

Miami Beach, Florida.

NELSON COBURN, A.M., Head Master.

Mr. and Mrs. Coburn started this school in 1926. It maintains a strong faculty composed of men and women selected for the purpose of affording pupils from the North, whether all-year or seasonal, straightforward instruction in all subjects making for Sound Academic Education. The stress is pre-eminently on Scholarship, but ample opportunity is given both boys and girls for varied Athletics and other activities. The classes are small and a great deal of Individual Attention is given.

PALM BEACH PRIVATE SCHOOL, Seaview Avenue, Palm Beach, Florida.

KARL B. DEARBORN, B.A., Head Master.

Primarily for the children of winter visitors, Palm Beach Private School, established in 1921, accepts boys and girls in the kindergarten and carries them through high school. The season extends from November 1 to May 1. Solution of the problem of coordinating its work with that of the northern schools has proved extremely successful. The School is a member of the Secondary Education Board and Educational Records Bureau.

Ample equipment and play fields are provided for Sports.

WEBBER COLLEGE,

535 Beacon Street, Boston, Massachusetts.

Babson Park, Florida.

GEORGE W. COLEMAN, LL.D., President.

WINSLOW L. WEBBER, Executive Director.

The major objective of Webber is to afford educational opportunities for young women who wish to prepare for active participation in business or who feel the need of business and financial training as an aid in the management of property, whether this property consists of securities, real estate or a business concern.

The courses include studies that will prove lifelong assets and enable graduates to face intelligently the many problems that future years will bring.

Four distinct courses are offered. The work of each course is arranged upon a two semester basis, embracing the Fall Term in Boston and the Winter Term in Florida. Classes are in session five days a week in the morning, with lectures, trips of inspection and conferences with faculty members on one or two afternoons a week.

High and preparatory school graduates enroll for two years. Girls with college background may complete the work in a single year.

BRADFORD JUNIOR COLLEGE, Bradford, Mass.
KATHARINE M. DENWORTH, Ph.D., President.

Bradford Junior College, founded in 1803 as Bradford Academy and located thirty-two miles from Boston, is the oldest institution in New England and next to the oldest in the United States for the higher education of women. It was the first junior college for women to be admitted to the New England Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools. Incorporated from the beginning as a non-profit-making institution, Bradford has endowment and trust funds. It attracts students from all parts of the United States and a few foreign countries.

Not only is Bradford an accredited two-year college of liberal arts, but it also offers extensive instruction and opportunities for specialization in fine and applied arts, music, speech and drama, and home economics. The educational program differentiates work for students finishing at Bradford, for students transferring to other colleges, and for students transferring to specialized schools.

Seven members of the highly trained and experienced faculty have the degree of Ph.D., and ten are men. Courses and equipment are thoroughly modern. Recently the dormitory has been completely refurnished and has been equipped with the best sprinkler system. A large campus, a gymnasium, and an indoor swimming pool, together with country club privileges, provide for all sports including riding and golf.

PINE MANOR JUNIOR COLLEGE, Wellesley, Mass.

Mrs. MARIE WARREN POTTER, President.

A member of the American Association of Junior Colleges, Pine Manor offers graduates of accredited secondary schools an individualized educational experience. The two-year Academic Course, in itself a well-rounded unit with a wide variety of electives, also prepares for transfer to the major colleges and universities; the two-year Homemaking Course combines with a cultural background a modern approach to domestic science and practical experience in home management; the Music Course provides three years specialization in instrumental or vocal music with allied academic subjects. The French Center, Music Center, and Homemaking Practice Cottage present unusual opportunities. Eminent musicians, lecturers, writers, and poets are brought to the college, and Boston, with its cultural advantages, is only fifteen miles distant.

The college life emphasizes the maintenance of high academic and social standards and the development of individual responsibility. Small classes, an influential faculty, small house groups, and integrating social centers are significant features. Student organizations permit stimulating group activities. Excellent physical training opportunities include Riding.

Pine Manor is an integral part of the organization known as the Dana Hall Schools (established in 1881), of which Miss Helen Temple Cooke is head. (See also p. 1003).

NICHOLS JUNIOR COLLEGE, Dudley, Massachusetts.

JAMES LAWSON CONRAD, B.B.A., President.

The old Nichols Academy, founded in 1815, but inoperative for the last twenty years, was reopened in September, 1931 as a Junior College of Business Administration and Executive Training. From the start its place in the educational world has been assured.

The first Junior College in the East exclusively for Men, this is also the first in the East to offer Business Administration Courses with full campus and dormitory equipment.

Nichols Junior College has been particularly fortunate in its clientele. Not only have its patrons been of the discriminating type, but it has attracted patrons from twenty-six states and fourteen foreign countries, enabling the College to avoid provincialism.

Attractively situated in the Dudley Hills section of Massachusetts, Nichols is readily accessible but apart from the distractions of the large cities. The spacious 75 acre Campus makes possible the full development of college life with every opportunity for athletics.

The exceedingly practical course, under the direction of men of proven ability, provides the required subjects of the ordinary four year College of Business Administration, with a few essential electives and cultural subjects.

Students are fitted for positions of trust and responsibility as Business Executives and yet have a cultural background without the necessity of spending two extra years in the study of unrelated subjects unless they so desire. Nichols is granted transfer privileges to selected Senior Colleges and Universities with a similar curriculum.

The program includes psychological examinations, personality study, and educational training by Dr. Witmer assisted by a staff of teachers, University trained under his personal supervision.

The Witmer School provides two playing fields, bridle paths, three large buildings — the Main House with sixteen bedrooms, six baths, two dining rooms, playroom, living room, and reception hall; a twenty room School House; a four room Play House; stabling for horses.

A teacher is always at hand to guide the child's entire life, much as an intelligent mother might. Stress is laid on table manners and social grace. The life is happy, regular, healthy.

Dr. Witmer aims to take a child with an initial school or personality difficulty, discover its cause, and through the development of the child's abilities, help him to surmount it.

SELECT DIRECTORY OF SUMMER CAMPS

The following Select Directory is a representative but not complete list and includes only those camps that responded to letters offering them the opportunity to be here represented. The invitation was not extended to all and not all accepted.

The SUMMER CAMP GUIDE, 3rd edition, 1938, 104 pages, published at 25c a copy, briefly lists 400 of the better camps.

The Handbook of SUMMER CAMPS, 12th edition, 1935, 734 pages, with maps and illustrations, published at $6.00, lists or describes 3500 private and organization camps.

Mail inquiries in regard to summer camps, clearly worded, will be answered, advice given and booklets furnished without charge.

A blank form on which to indicate exactly the kind of camp wanted will be sent on request.

For extended correspondence or investigation and for personal consultation a fee is charged those who are able to pay.

SELECT DIRECTORY OF SUMMER CAMPS

CAMP KINEOWATHA, Wilton, Me. Elisabeth Bass, Director.

Situated on the shore of Wilson Lake, Kineowatha accepts girls from 8-18. The program includes Swimming, Canoeing, Canoe Trips; Tennis, Golf, Hockey, Baseball; Crafts, Dancing, Dramatics, and Riding. The campers are divided into three groups, Juniors, Middlers, and Seniors, with special activities for each group. KINEOWATHA TUTORING UNIT provides instruction in preparatory school subjects.

CAMP ROBINSON CRUSOE, Sturbridge, Mass. Joshua and Leah Lieberman, Directors.

Camp Robinson Crusoe was formed in 1929 for the children of parents interested in Progressive Education. The staff of mature men and women has had considerable experience in this movement. The camp site of 450 acres of forest, lake and meadow, with excellent equipment and buildings, provides facilities for a wide range of activities. The camp is nonsectarian and co-educational, admitting boys and girls 7 to 14.

CAMP WAYA-AWI, Rangeley, Me. Arthur N. Sharp, Director,

The Loomis School, Windsor, Connecticut. This camp is operated as a summer school for boys aged 9-19. Here in the delightful Rangeley Lakes region, boys who require scholastic work during the summer months are able to meet their needs and at the same time enjoy the opportunities which a boy's summer camp offers. Expert analysis of scholastic problems is given with particular attention to reading, spelling and writing difficulties.

ALLENHOOK and ALLENOLL, MacMahan Island, Me. Mr. and Mrs. W. Clinton Allen, Directors, B-21 Manursing Lodge,

Rye, N. Y. Affiliated camps on the Maine coast for boys and girls 8-20. Separate program and location. Sailing, navigation, deep-sea fishing, swimming and tennis are featured in both camps. Tutoring in college preparatory subjects is available. There are frequent trips to places of interest on the Maine coast. Enrollment limited.

CAMP HALMARY, THE ORIGINAL SPORTSMAN'S
CAMP FOR BOYS, Pittsburg, New Hampshire.

HAROLD E. PLANTE, 35 Channing Road, Belmont, Mass.

For the boy who has outgrown the usual camp routine, Camp Halmary meets a special need. Life is informal, no regulation uniforms are worn, and unnecessary routine is dispensed with. There is one State Licensed Guide to every three campers. Fly-casting, Shooting, Panning Gold, Trail Life, Log-Rolling, Canoeing, are special features. Limited to 12 Christian boys 12-18. During the Christmas holidays 12 boys enjoy Skiing and Snowshoeing. Ice Fishing is another popular winter sport.

CAMP WAHTONAH, Brewster, Massachusetts.

MRS. F. T. BURDETT, Director,
419 West 119th Street, New York City.

Camp Wahtonah offers girls the benefits of a summer at the seashore with the pleasures of the woods and fields; the joys of a healthful and natural life out of doors; a life which will make them self-reliant.

Wahtonah, beautifully situated on Cape Cod Bay, has fifty acres of pine woods and open fields and a thousand feet of waterfront. The clean white sand affords delightful bathing.

Sailing and Tennis are emphasized; Canoe and overnight land trips, Horseback Riding, Dancing, Music (vocal and instrumental), Nature and Handcrafts are offered.

Full details of equipment, food, health safeguards are described in Illustrated Catalogue.

For Camp Information, Advice or Booklets

WASSOOKEAG SCHOOL-CAMP, Dexter, Me. Lloyd Harvey Hatch, Director. The School-Camp blends education and recreation for boys who have outgrown the youngsters' play camp. Camp Program—Tennis, Sailing, Aquaplaning, Swimming, Golf, Riding, Baseball. School Program—removal of school conditions; preparation for advanced school credits and College Entrance Examinations; a Transition Program supplementing preparatory school and introducing college standards. One teacher for every three "student-campers." Fully accredited.

CAMP ZAKELO, Harrison, Me. I. Zarakov, 300 Tappan St., Brookline, Mass. Assoc. Dirs: H. S. Ulen, Swimming Coach, Harvard Univ., Cambridge; E. S. Adams, Master, Albany Acad., Albany, N. Y.; Carlon Ray, Prin., Angier Sch., Waban, Mass. In a private cove on Long Lake, Zakelo with its $100,000 equipment offers to boys 6-19 in four separate divisions an elective, elastic program of cultural and athletic subjects. Staff of 35 experienced, well-bred experts—a graduate doctor, trained nurse, camp mother, 2 physical directors. Riding, Tutoring. Sea Camp. Mt. Trips. Canadian Trips.

THE SPRAGUE CAMPS, Minocqua, Wis. Camp Minocqua for Boys 7 to 17 years, Dr. J. P. Sprague; Clearwater Camp for Girls 7 to 17 years, Mrs. J. P. Sprague. Address Oak Crest Hotel, Evanston, Ill. Camps located in State Forest Preserve. An environment that gives to boys and girls a love for God's great out-of-doors and teaches them how to live happily in it. An opportunity to improve skills and create a joyous community life.

CAMP ARBUTUS, Mayfield, Mich. Edith A. Steere, Director, 2461 Packard Rd., Ann Arbor, Mich. Arbutus in its 24th season is for well-recommended girls from 7 to 18. Separate Junior group. One-half mile sandy shore on beautiful lake nine miles from Grand Traverse Bay. Water Sports, Woodcraft, Trips and Pioneering are featured. Two branch pioneer camps. All sports including Sailing and Riding. Crafts, Photography, Dramatics, Puppetry, Nature Study, Museum. Resident physician. Moderate fee. Booklet.

CAMP SUSQUEHANNA, New Milford, Pennsylvania.
R. T. SMITH, 318 West 81st Street, New York City.

Activities at Susquehanna are elective and are adapted to each Boy's age requirements and length of camping experience.

Every Boy learns to ride, competent instruction being provided at no extra expense. Swimming, Boating, Canoeing, Baseball and Tennis are popular activities; also Dramatics, Nature Study and Campcraft.

Susquehanna is on a plateau 200 feet above East Lake, in the heart of the Blue Ridge Mountains. An adjoining farm is owned and operated by the Camp. In both farm and camp there are 700 acres. Age limits 5-18. The fee of $250 is all-inclusive.

CAMP RIVERDALE, Long Lake,
Hamilton County, New York.
FRANK S. HACKETT, Riverdale Country School,
Riverdale-on-Hudson, New York City.

Truly a wilderness camp, one of the very few in this country, Riverdale offers Canoe Trips, Mountain Climbing, Tennis, and Field and Water Sports, all under expert guidance. Along with the fun of sports goes the fun of learning Forestry, Woodcraft, Music, Art, First Aid, and general usefulness. A small group of boys (sixty) lives intimately with a cultured company, including experts in water and field sports, and woodsmen, naturalist, doctor, artist, musician, and craftsman.

INDEX OF SCHOOLS

INDEX OF SCHOOLS

Here are indexed schools described or listed in this 22nd edition of the Handbook, with page reference to the Critical Text, the Supplementary Lists and the Illustrated Announcements.

The names of the directors and the post office addresses of those schools on which we have authoritative and up to date information make this a complete mailing list.

Where the school bears the name of a person, as Robert Jones Academy, it will be found under the surname, e.g., Jones Academy, Robert.

In this Index, the last section of the book to be printed, will be found also names of directors received too late for inclusion in the body of the book.

Names of directors and complete addresses, so far as we know them, of schools in the Supplementary Lists will be found by referring to the page indicated.

No page reference is given for the schools as they appear in the Classified Lists of Schools to Meet Special Needs, pp. 839-885. The various classifications of these Lists will be found in the Table of Contents, pp. 5-16.

HUMAN AFFAIRS, 1937-38

200 pages, Paper $.50, Cloth $1.00

This reviews, with special reference to the English speaking people, the educational and intellectual status of the world twenty years after the last great war and just before the next threatens.

It takes us to the great universities; the leaders of the professions and productive activities; to the laboratories and studies of the thinkers; on to the frontiers of knowledge with the scientists.

This includes a reprint of the introduction to the 22nd edition of the HANDBOOK OF PRIVATE SCHOOLS, pages 33-224.

The SOCIAL FRONTIER

A monthly journal of educational criticism and reconstruction

A medium of expression of The John Dewey Society for the Study of Education and Culture

FOUNDED 1934

George W. Hartmann, Editor

William H. Kilpatrick, Chairman, National Board of Contributors

THE SOCIAL FRONTIER is not just another pedagogical periodical, an organ for high-grade polemics and distinguished controversies, a social studies curriculum annex, an academic review of educational philosophy, or an independent adventure in fearless journalism. The FRONTIER may be all of these, but it is something more. It is a channel through which the entire social situation is analyzed and interpreted for its educational implications; and conversely, a means whereby professional educators and interested laymen may seek to influence beneficially the total cultural pattern of our times.

Its editorials are an expression of the most advanced thought and action now current in the educational world. In its columns first appear those new ideas which will be the commonplace of a decade ahead.

Through its major articles vigorous leaders of national opinion—scholars, laymen, and public figures—speak out boldly, clearly, and with refreshing originality on the major issues of "school and society." Its book reviews are models of style and authentic judgment.

Subscribers to THE SOCIAL FRONTIER get the best that educational leadership can produce. Every school month they receive 32 pages of solid food for thought—no froth, no fillers or "padding," no distracting and irrelevant advertisements.

To those who have identified themselves intimately with its destinies, THE SOCIAL FRONTIER is now more indispensable than ever. Its very existence is a testimony to a belief that the vital questions of our day can be vigorously and thoughtfully handled by members of the teaching profession without enlisting the stale and clumsy language of "pedagogue," the raucous tongue of embittered protest, or the smug discourse of comfortable obscurantists.

History in the Making

Current History, the monthly fact magazine, analyzes, interprets, and explains in terms you can easily understand, the course of national and international affairs. It gives you, in carefully selected articles, the background behind world events, after recognized authorities have had time and thought to comprehend them.

Current History is extensively used in the schools and colleges of the country.

The Cooperative Study of Secondary School Standards, Washington, D.C., evaluating 127 American periodicals, lists Current History SECOND among all general magazines. We will be glad to send you a copy of this interesting report.
